

The Project Gutenberg eBook of The Satires of A. Persius Flaccus

This ebook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg License included with this ebook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you'll have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

Title: The Satires of A. Persius Flaccus

Author: Persius

Contributor: Otto Jahn

Editor: Basil L. Gildersleeve

Release date: July 22, 2007 [eBook #22119]

Language: Latin

Credits: Produced by Louise Hope, David Starner and the Online Distributed Proofreading Team at <http://www.pgdp.net>

 START OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK THE SATIRES OF A. PERSIUS FLACCUS ***

This e-text includes characters that will only display in UTF-8 (Unicode) file encoding, including a number of Greek words:

Συνίσταντο οἱ μὲν ὡς τοῦτον, οἱ δ' ὡς ἐκεῖνον....

ă, ě; ā, ē, ī, ō (letters with breve or macron)

If any of these characters do not display properly—in particular, if the diacritic does not appear directly above the letter—or if the apostrophes and quotation marks in this paragraph appear as garbage, you may have an incompatible browser or unavailable fonts. First, make sure that the browser's "character set" or "file encoding" is set to Unicode (UTF-8). You may also need to change your browser's default font.

All Greek text has mouse-hover transliterations: ὡς.

A few typographical errors have been corrected. They have been marked in the text with mouse-hover popups.

THE SATIRES

OF

A. PERSIUS FLACCUS

EDITED BY

BASIL L. GILDERSLEEVE, PH.D. (GÖTTINGEN), LL.D., PROFESSOR OF GREEK IN THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA.

NEW YORK:

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS, FRANKLIN SQUARE.
1875.

PREFACE.

iii

THE text of this edition of Persius is in the main that of Jahn's last recension (1868). The few changes are discussed in the Notes and recorded in the Critical Appendix.

In the preparation of the Notes I have made large use of Jahn's standard edition, without neglecting the commentaries of Casaubon, König, and Heinrich, or the later editions by Maclean, Pretor, and Conington, or such recent monographs on Persius as I have been able to procure. Special obligations have received special acknowledgment.

My personal contributions to the elucidation of Persius are too slight to warrant me in following the prevalent fashion and cataloguing the merits of my work under the modest guise of aims and endeavors. I shall be content, if I have succeeded in making Persius less distasteful to the general student; more than content, if those who have devoted long and patient study to this difficult author shall accord me the credit of an honest effort to make myself acquainted with the poet himself as well as with his chief commentators.

iv

In compliance with the wish of the distinguished scholar at whose instance I undertook this work, Professor Charles Short, of Columbia College, New York, I have inserted references to my Latin Grammar and to the Grammar of Allen and Greenough, here and there to Madvig.

B. L. GILDERSLEEVE.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA, February, 1875.

v

CONTENTS.

	Page
INTRODUCTION	vii
A. PERSII FLACCI SATURARUM LIBER	39
VITA PERSII	65
NOTES	71
CRITICAL APPENDIX	207
INDEX	211

Quando cerco norme di gusto, vado ad Orazio, il più amabile; quando ho bisogno di bile contra le umane ribalderie, visito Giovenale, il più splendido; quando mi studio d'esser onesto, vivo con PERSIO, il più saggio, e con infinito piacere mescolato di vergogna bevo li dettati della ragione su le labbra di questo verecondo e santissimo giovanetto.

VINCENZO MONTI.

vi

Συγίσταντο οἱ μὲν ὡς τοῦτον, οἱ δ' ὡς ἐκεῖνον πλὴν μόνου τοῦ Ἴωνος· ἐκεῖνος δὲ μέσον ἑαυτὸν ἐφύλαττεν.

ΛΟΥΚΙΑΝΟΥ.

PERSIUS das rechte Ideal eines hoffärtigen und mattherzigen der Poesie beflissenen Jungen.

MOMMSEN.

INTRODUCTION.

vii

AN ancient Vita Persii, of uncertain authorship, of evident authenticity, gives all that it is needful for us to know about our poet—much more than is vouchsafed to us for the rich individuality of Lucilius, much more than we can divine for the unsubstantial character of Juvenal.

Aulus Persius Flaccus was born on the day before the nones of December, A.U.C. 787, A.D. 34, at Volaterrae, in Etruria. That Luna in Liguria was his birthplace is a false inference of some scholars from the words meum mare in a passage of the sixth satire, where he describes his favorite resort on the Riviera.

The family of Persius belonged to the old Etruscan nobility, and more than one Persius appears in inscriptions found at Volaterrae. Other circumstances make for his Etruscan origin: the Etruscan form of his name, Aules, so written in most MSS. of his Life; the Etruscan name of his mother, Sisennia; the familiar spitefulness of his mention of Arretium, the allusions to the Tuscan haruspex, to the Tuscan pedigree; the sneering mention of the Umbrians—fat-witted folk, who lived across the Tuscan border. Most of these, it is true, are minute points, and would be of little weight in the case of an author of wider vision, but well-nigh conclusive in a writer like Persius, who tried to make up for the narrowness of his personal experience by a microscopic attention to details.

Persius belonged to the same sphere of society as Maecenas. Like Maecenas an Etruscan, he was, like Maecenas, an equus Romanus. The social class of which he was a member did much for Roman literature; Etruria's contributions were far less valuable, and Mommsen is right when he recognizes in both these men, so unlike in life and in principle—the one a callous wordling, the other a callow philosopher—the stamp of their strange race, a race which is a puzzle rather than a mystery. Indeed, the would-be mysterious is one of the most salient points in the style of Persius as in the religion of the Etruscans, and Persius's elaborate involution of the commonplace is parallel with the secret wisdom of his countrymen. The minute detail of the Etruscan ritual has its counterpart in the minute detail of Persius's style, and the want of a due sense of proportion and a certain coarseness of language in our author remind us of the defects of Etruscan art and the harshness of the Etruscan tongue.

Persius was born, if not to great wealth, at least to an ample competence. His father died when the poet was but six years old, and his education was conducted at Volaterrae under the superintendence of his mother and her second husband, Fusius. For the proper appreciation of the career of Persius, it is a fact of great significance that he seems to have been very much under the influence of the women of his household. To this influence he owed the purity of his habits; but feminine training is not without its disadvantages for the conduct of life. For social refinement there is no better school; but the pet of the home circle is apt to make the grossest blunders when he ventures into the larger world of no manners, and attempts to use the language of outside sinners. And so, when Persius undertakes to rebuke the effeminacy of his time, he outbids the worst passages of Horace and rivals the most lurid indecencies of Juvenal.

When Persius was twelve years old he went to Rome, as Horace and Ovid had done before him, for the purpose of a wider and higher education, and was put to school with Verginius Flaccus, the rhetorician, and Remmius Palaemon, the grammarian. Verginius Flaccus was exiled from Rome by Nero, with Musonius Rufus, on account of the prominence which he had achieved as a teacher, and Quintilian quotes him as an authority in his profession. Remmius Palaemon, the other teacher of Persius, a man of high attainments and low principles, was one of the most illustrious grammarians of a time when grammarians could be illustrious. A freedman, with a freedman's character, he was arrogant and vain, grasping and prodigal—in short, a Sir Epicure Mammon of a professor. But his prodigious memory, his ready flow of words, his power of improvising poetry, attracted many pupils during his prolonged life, and after his death he was cited with respect by other grammarians—a rare apotheosis among that captious tribe. The first satirical efforts of ingenuous youth are usually aimed at their preceptors, and the verses which Persius quotes in the First Satire are quite as likely to be from the school of Palaemon as from the poems of Nero.

But the true teacher of Persius, the man to whom he himself attributed whatever progress he made in that 'divine philosophy' which deals at once with the constitution of the universe and the conduct of life—his 'spiritual director,' to use the language of Christian ascetics—was Cornutus. Persius is one of those literary celebrities whose title to fame is not beyond dispute; and while some maintain his right to high distinction on the ground of intrinsic merit, others seek with perhaps too much avidity for the accidents to which he is supposed to owe his renown. If it is necessary to excuse, as it were, his reputation, the relation of Persius to Cornutus might go far to explain the care which schoolmasters have taken of the memory of the poet. No matter how crabbed the teacher may be, how austere the critic, the opening of the Fifth Satire, with its warm tribute to the guide of his life and the friend of his heart, calls up the image of the ideal pupil, and touches into kindred the brazen bowels of Didymus.

Lucius Annaeus Cornutus, of Leptis in Africa, was a philosopher, grammarian, and rhetorician. It has been conjectured that he was a freedman of the literary family of the Annaei; and this is rendered probable by the fact that Annaeus Lucanus, the nephew of Annaeus Seneca, was his pupil. The year of his life and the year of his death are alike unknown. He was banished from Rome by Nero because he had ventured to suggest that Nero's projected epic on Roman history would be too long if drawn out to four hundred books, and that the imperial poem would find no readers. When one of Nero's flatterers rejoined that Chrysippus was a still more voluminous author, Cornutus had the bad taste to point out the practical importance of the writings of Chrysippus in contrast with Nero's unpractical project; and Nero, who had a poet's temper, if not a poet's gifts, sent him to an island, there to revise his literary judgment. Cornutus was not only a man of various learning in philosophy, rhetoric, and grammar, but a tragic poet of some note, and perhaps a satirist. Whether the jumble that bears the name of Cornutus or Phurnutus, De Natura Deorum, is in any measure traceable to our Cornutus, is not pertinent to our subject. Of more importance to us than his varied attainments is his pure and lofty character, which made him worthy of the ardent affection with which Persius clung to his 'Socratic bosom.' It is recorded to his honor that Persius having bequeathed to him his library and a considerable sum of money, he

viii

ix

x

xi

accepted the books only and relinquished the money to the family of Persius. Nor did he cease his loving care for his friend after his ashes, but revised his satires, and suppressed the less mature performances of the young poet.

The social circle in which Persius moved was not wide. The mark of the beast called Coterie, which is upon the foreheads of the most plentifully belauded Roman poets, is on his brow also. But it must be said that the men whom he associated with belonged to the chosen few of a corrupt time, albeit they would have been of more service to their country if they had not recognized themselves so conspicuously as the elect. The Stoic salon in which Persius lived and moved and had his being reminds M. Martha of a Puritan household; it reminds us of the sequestered Legitimist opposition to the France of yesterday. We are so apt to see parallels when we are well acquainted with but one of the lines—or with neither.

Let us pass in review some of the associates and acquaintances of Persius.

Among his early friends was Caesius Bassus, to whom the Sixth Satire is addressed: an older contemporary, who had studied with the same master, next to Horace, by a long remove, among the Roman lyricists. To his fellow-pupils belong Calpurnius, who is more than doubtfully identified with the author of the Bucolics; and Lucan (Annaeus Lucanus), the poet of the Pharsalia, who shared with him the instructions of Cornutus, and is said to have shown the most fervent admiration of the genius of his school-fellow. We are told that when the First Satire was recited, Lucan exclaimed that these were true poems. Whether he accompanied this encomium with a disparagement of his own performances, or simply had reference to the modest disclaimer of Persius's Prologue, as Jahn is inclined to think, does not appear. The anecdote is in perfect keeping with the perfervid Spanish temper of Lucan and Lucan's family. But this momentary burst of admiration is no indication of any genuine sympathy between the effusive and rhetorical Cordovan and the shy, philosophical Etruscan. Nominally they belonged to the same school—the Stoic; but Persius was ready to resist unto blood, Lucan's Stoicism was a mere parade.

xii

While this anecdote leaves us in suspense as to the relations between Lucan and Persius, we have express evidence that there was no sympathy between Persius and Seneca. They met, we are informed, but the poet took little pleasure in the society of the essayist. This is not the place to attempt a characteristic of this famous writer, who, like Persius, leaves few readers indifferent. Once the idol of the moralists—who of all old birds are the most easily caught with chaff—Seneca has fallen into comparative disfavor within the last few decades; yet sometimes a vigorous champion starts up to do battle for him, such as Farrar in England, and, with more moderation, Constant Martha in France; and his cause is by no means hopeless if the advocate can keep his hearers from reading Seneca for themselves. It is impossible not to admire Seneca in passages; it seems very difficult to retain the admiration after reading him continuously. The glittering phrase masks a poverty of thought; 'the belt with its broad gold covers a hidden wound.' To Persius, the youthful Stoic, with his high purpose and his transcendental views of life, Seneca the courtier, the time-server, the adroit flatterer, must have appeared little better than a hypocrite, or, which is worse to an ardent mind, a practical negation of his own aspirations. The young convert—and Persius's philosophy was Persius's religion—in the first glow of his enthusiasm, must have been repelled by the callousness of the older professor of the same faith. And yet so strong was the impress of the age that Persius and Seneca are not so far asunder after all. To understand Persius we must read Seneca; and the lightning stroke of Caligula's tempestuous brain, harena sine calce, illuminates and shivers the one as well as the other.

xiii

If the family of the Annaei did not prove congenial, there were others to whom Persius might look for sympathy and instruction. Such was M. Servilius Nonianus, a man of high position, of rare eloquence, of unsullied fame. Such was Plotius Macrinus, to whom the Second Satire is addressed, itself a eulogy. Even in his own family circle there were persons whose lofty characters have made them celebrated in history. His kinswoman Arria, herself destined to become famous for her devotion to her husband, was the wife of Thrasea Paetus, and the daughter of that other Arria, whose supreme cry, NON DOLET, when she taught her husband how to meet his doom, is one of the most familiar speeches of a period when speech was bought with death. Thrasea, the husband of the younger Arria, was one of the foremost men of his time, and bore himself with a moderation which contrasts strongly with the ostentatious virtue of some of the Stoic chiefs. He rebuked the vices of his time unsparingly, but steadily observed the respect due to the head of the state; and even when the decree was passed which congratulated Nero on the murder of his mother, he contented himself with retiring from the senate-house. But Thrasea's silent disapproval of one crime fired Nero to another, and his refusal to deprecate the wrath of the emperor was the cause of his ruin—if that could be called ruin which he welcomed as he poured out his blood in libation to Jupiter the Liberator.

That the familiar intercourse with such a man should have inspired a youth of the education and the disposition of Persius with still higher resolves and still higher endeavors is not strange. That it sufficed, as some say, to penetrate Persius with the sober wisdom of maturer years, and made up to him for the lack of personal experience and artistic balance, is attributing more to association than association can accomplish.

xiv

To Thrasea's influence Jahn ascribes Persius's juvenile essays in the preparation of praetextae, or tragedies with Roman themes, and it is not unlikely that a poetical description of his travels (ὁδοιπορικῶν) referred to some little trip that he took with Thrasea. Thanks to Cornutus, this youthful production—which doubtless was nothing more than a weak imitation of Horace, or haply of Lucilius—was suppressed after the death of the author, and with it his praetexta, and a short poem in honor of the elder Arria also.

The purity of Persius's morals, and the love which he bore his mother, his sister, his aunt, stand to each other reciprocally as cause and effect; and the occasional crudity of his language is, as we have already seen, the crudity of a bookish man, who thinks that the sure way to do a thing is to overdo it. Persius was a man of handsome person, gentle bearing, attractive manners, and added to the charm of his society the interest which always gathers about those whom the gods love.

He died on his estate at the eighth milestone on the Appian Road, vitis stomachi, eight days before the kalends of December, A.U.C. 815—A.D. 62—in the twenty-eighth year of his age.

Cornutus first revised the satires of his friend, and then gave them to Caesius Bassus to edit. The only important change that Cornutus made was the substitution of quis non for Mida rex (1,121), a subject which is discussed in the Commentary. Other traces of wavering expression and duplex recensio are due to the imagination of commentators, who attribute to the young poet a logical method and an exactness of development for which the style of Persius gives them no warrant. Raro et tarde scripsit, the statement of the Life of Persius, explains much.

xv

The poems of Persius were received with applause as soon as they appeared, and the old Vita Persii would have us believe that people scrambled for the copies as if the pages were so many Sabine women. Quintilian, in his famous inventory of Greek and Roman literature, says that Persius earned a great deal of glory, and true glory, by a single book, and here and there the great scholar does Persius homage by imitating him; and Martial holds up Persius with his one book of price, as a contrast to the empty bulk of a half-forgotten epic. But it would not be worth the while to repeat the list of the admirers of Persius in the ages of later Latinity. It suffices to say that he was the special favorite of the Latin Fathers. Augustin quotes or imitates him often, and Jerome is saturated with the phraseology of our poet. Commended to Christian teachers by the elevation of his moral tone, by the pithiness of his maxims and reflections, and the energy of his figures, he was set up on a high chair, a big school-boy, to teach other school-boys, and scarcely a voice was raised in rebellion for centuries. But since the time of the Scaligers, who were not to be kept back by any consideration for the feelings of the Fathers, there has been much unfriendly criticism of Persius; and the world owes him a debt of gratitude for provoking an animosity that has opened the way to a freer discussion of the literary merits of the authors of antiquity. To be subject all one's life through fear of literary death to the bondage of antique dullness, as well as to the thralldom of contemporary stupidity, would have been a sad result of the revival of letters.

xvi

The first and last charge brought against Persius is his obscurity. Admitted by all, it is variously interpreted variously excused, variously attacked. Now it is accounted for by the political necessities of the time. Now it is attributed to the perverse ingenuity of the poet, which was fostered by the perverse tendencies of an age when, as Quintilian says, Pervasit iam multos ista persuasio ut id iam demum eleganter dictum putent quod interpretandum sit. Some simply resolve the lack of clearness into the lack of artistic power; others intimate that the fault lies more in the reader than in the author, whose dramatic liveliness, which puzzles us, presented no difficulties to the critics of his own century. But the controversy is not confined to the obscurity of the satires, Persius is all debatable ground. Some admire the pithy sententiousness of the poet; others sneer at his priggish affectation of superiority. Some point to the bookish reminiscences, which betray the mere student; others recall the example of Ben Jonson, of Molière, to show that in literature, as in life, the greatest borrowers are often the richest men, and bid us observe with what rare and vivid power he has painted every scene that he has witnessed with his own eyes. To some he is a copyist of copyists; to others his real originality asserts itself most conspicuously where the imitation seems to be the closest. Julius Scaliger calls him miserrimus auctor; Mr. Conington notes his kindred to Carlyle.

No critic has put the problem with more brutal frankness than M. Nisard, who, at the close of his flippant but suggestive chapter on Persius, asks the question, Y a-t-il profit à lire Perse? Though he makes a faint show of balancing the Ayes and Noes, it is very plain how he himself would vote. The impatient Frenchman is evidently not of a mind 'to read prefaces, biographies, memoirs, and commentaries on these prefaces, these biographies, these memoirs, and notes on these commentaries, in order to form an idea that will haply be very false and assuredly very debatable, of a work about which no one will ever talk to you, and of a poet about whom you will never find any one to talk to.' But the question, which may be an open one to a critic, is not an open one to an editor; and editors of Persius are especially prone to value their author by the labor which he has cost them, by the material which they have gathered about the text. The thoughts are, after all, so common that parallels are to be found on every hand; the compass is so small that it is an easy matter to carry in the memory every word, every phrase; and so-called illustrations suggest themselves even to an ordinary scholar in bewildering numbers, while the looseness of the connection gives ample scope to speculation. Hence the sarcasm of Joseph Scaliger: Non pulchra habet sed in eum pulcherrima possumus scribere; and the well-known criticism of the same scholar: Au Perse de Casaubon la saulce vaut mieux que le poisson. But this artificial love on the part of the editors has not contributed to the popularity of the author, and the youthful poet has been overlaid by his erudite commentators. Besides this disadvantage, Persius, when he is read at all, comes immediately after Juvenal, and, as if to enhance the contrast, is generally bound up with him; and the homeliness of his tropes, the crabbedness of his dialogue, the roughness of his transitions repel the young student, who finds the riddance of the historical and archaeological work which Juvenal involves a poor compensation for the lack of the large manner and the dazzling rhetoric of the great declaimer. On the other hand, maturer scholars have been found to reverse the popular verdict, and to say, with Mr. Simcox, that 'the shy, youthful fervor of the dutiful boy, combined with the literary honesty which kept Persius from writing any thing which was not a part of his permanent consciousness, makes him improve upon every reading, which is more than can be said of Juvenal, who writes as if he thought and felt little in the intervals of writing.' But while it is easy to get tired of Juvenal, it is not so easy to become enamored of Persius; and it must be admitted that the pleasure is questionable. Yet, in spite of M. Nisard, there is no real question about the utility of the study of the poet, who illustrates by what he does not say even more than by what he says the character of an age which is of supreme importance to the historian. Even if we put the study on lower ground, we must admit that Persius's title to a prominent position in the annals of Roman literature is indefeasible. However desirable it may be to get rid of him, an author who has left his impress on Rabelais and Ben Jonson, as well as on Montaigne and Boileau—an author whose poems have furnished so many quotations to modern letters, can not be dismissed from the necessities of a 'polite education' with a convenient sneer. Persius deserves our attention, if it were only as a problem of literary taste.

xvii

xviii

To the end of the study of Persius, it is best to look away from the conflicting views of the critics, and to abandon the attempt to distinguish between the weight of facts and the momentum of rhetoric in the balanced antitheses of praise and blame. The position of the poet will be most accurately determined by the calculation of the statics of his department and his age.

The Satire is the only extant form of Latin poetry that can lay claim to a truly national origin; and the error into which the early historians of classical literature were led by the resemblance between the name of the Roman satire and the name of the Greek satyr-drama has long been corrected. But the truth which this error involves, the connection between the comic drama and the satire, remains. The satire goes back to the popular source of comedy, and holds in solution all the elements which the Greeks combined into various forms of dramatic merriment. As the rhythmical movements, which culminate in such perfections as the dactylic hexameter and the iambic trimeter, are common to our whole race, and the rude Saturnian verse is one with the heroic, so the rustic songs of harvest and vintage are common to Greece and Italy; and it is no marvel that, as the satire was working itself out to classic proportions, it should have felt its kindred to Greek comedy, and should have drawn its materials and its methods from that literature on which Roman literature in its other departments was more directly dependent. And so the satire, though a genuine growth of Italian soil, was none the less subject to Greek influences. It was trained into Greek forms, it was permeated by Greek thought; and here as elsewhere the retranslation into Greek, of which the older commentators were so fond, is often the key to the meaning; here as elsewhere our appreciation of the author, as a whole, is conditioned by our knowledge of Greek literature.

Horace, the master of Roman satire, has more than once drawn the parallel between satire and comedy; and Persius, who follows the literary, though not the philosophical creed of his predecessor, aims even more distinctly than Horace does at reproducing the mimicry of comedy on the narrow stage of the satire. At the close of the First Satire he goes so far as to demand of his readers the intense study of the Old Attic Comedy as the preparation for the enjoyment of his poems—an extraordinary demand, if we do not make due allowance for the rhetorical expression of high aims and earnest endeavors. A comparison of the triumvirate of the comoedia prisca of Attica reveals little trace of direct influence, abundant evidence of extreme diversity in expression and conception. I say 'expression,' not 'language.' It is true that the language of Persius has a virile tone, but the masculine energy of his words is often out of keeping with the scholastic tameness of his thoughts. The breezy Pnyx of the Athenian and the stuffy lecticula lucubratoria of the Roman are not further apart than Aristophanes and Persius.

The New Attic Comedy, the comedy of situation and manners, furnished themes that lay nearer to the genius of Persius, although the grace of a Menander was much further from his grasp than from Terence, the half-Menander of Caesar's epigram. One passage is all but translated from Menander's Eunuch; and if Persius did not borrow traits for his picture of the miser and the spendthrift from the master of the New Comedy, it was not for lack of models. Indeed, so unreal is Persius, with all the realism of his language, that one of the most striking features of his poems—the opposition to the military—loses somewhat of its significance when we remember that the Macedonian period, to which the New Comedy belongs, is crowded with typical soldiers of fortune, with their coarse love of sensual pleasure—their coarse contempt of every thing that can not be eaten, drunk, or handled. Every line of Persius's centurion can be reproduced from the Greek; and although it would be going too far to say that there was no counterpart to his sketch in his own experience, although, on the contrary, Persius seems to have verified by actual observation whatever he learned from books, the historical value of his portrait is very much reduced by the existence of the Greek type. As a specimen of a kind of clerico-political opposition to an empire which its enemies might call an empire of brute force and military mechanism, the hostility of Persius to a class whose predominance was making itself felt more and more is not without its point and interest, and it is unfortunate that we have to leave its reality in suspense.

Yet another form of the comic drama was the Mime, and we have the explicit statement of Joannes Lydus that Persius imitated the famous mimographer, Sophron; and although the fragments of Sophron are so scanty that this statement can not be verified, it is not without its intrinsic probability. The mimetic power of Sophron is notorious, and Persius might well have taken lessons from the man whom Plato acknowledged as his master. The dialogue, thus borrowed from the mime, became the artistic form of philosophic composition, and, as Persius's Satires are essentially moral treatises, it is not surprising that he should have made large use of the same machinery. Plato himself furnished the movement for two of his essays, and we can detect a community of models between Persius and some of the later Greek writers. Lucian, the mercurial, and Persius, the saturnine, often work on the same theme, each in his way; and when the dialogue is dropped, and the bustle of the drama is succeeded by the effects of the scene-painter's craft, we are reminded of another group of copyists, and find all the picturesque detail for which Persius is so famous in the letters of Alkiphron and Aristainetos, themselves far-off echoes of the New Comedy.

xix

xx

xxi

Surely these are originals enough, the Attic Comedy, the Mime, Sophron and Plato, Menander and Philemon. But we find other models nearer home, and, passing by the reflections of Greek comedy in Plautus and Terence, its refractions in Afranius and Pomponius, we come to the satiric exemplars of Persius—Lucilius and Horace. Mox ut a scholis et magistris divertit, lecto libro Lucilli decimo, vehementer saturas componere instituit. This statement of the old Vita Persii is much more consonant with the character of Persius than his own affected mirthfulness. His 'saucy spleen' had as little to do with his verse writing as righteous indignation with the rhetorical outpouring of Juvenal. His laughter was as much a part of the conventionalities of the satire as the Camena was of his confidences to Cornutus. School-boys all imitate circus-riders; here and there one mimics the clown; and Persius, who had not outgrown the tendencies of boyhood, straightway began to make copies of verses in the manner of Lucilius. At the same time he was too much under the influence of Horace to follow Lucilius in his negligences, and too little master of the form to strike the mean between slovenly dictation and painful composition. As an imitator of Lucilius he boldly lashes men of straw where Lucilius flogged Lupus and Mucius, and breaks his milk-teeth on Alkibiades and Dama where Lucilius broke his jaw-teeth on living and moving enemies. As an imitator of Horace he appropriates the garb of Horatian diction; but the easy movement of roguish Flaccus is lost, and the stiff stride of the young Stoic betrays him at every turn.

xxii

As in the case of the Old Attic Comedy, Persius's intellectual affinity with Lucilius was purely imaginary; and for the purposes of this study it is unnecessary to reproduce the lines of Horace's portrait of the 'great nursling of Aurunca,' or to attempt to form a mosaic out of the chipped chips of Lucian Müller's recent collection. The wide range of theme, the manly carelessness of style, the bold criticism, the bright humor, the biting wit—in short, almost every characteristic of Lucilius that we can distinguish, shows how little kindred there must have been between the two men. The dozen scattered verses of the Tenth Book of Lucilius, which is said to have suggested the theme of the First Satire of Persius, and the fragments of the Fourth Book, which is imitated by Persius in his Third Satire, though more significant, give us no clew to the manner or the extent of his indebtedness. Here and there a verse, a hemistich, a jingle may have been taken from Lucilius, and he may have enriched his vocabulary here and there from Lucilius's store of drastic words; but his obligations to Lucilius, real and imaginary, are all as nothing in comparison with the large drafts which he drew on the treasury of Horace.

xxiii

The obligations of Persius to Horace have been the theme of all the editors. The scholiasts themselves have quoted parallels, and Casaubon has written a special treatise on the subject, and commentators, with almost childish rivalry, have vied with each other in noting verbal coincidences and similar trains of thought. The fact of the imitation is too evident to need proof, and it would have been much more profitable to examine the causes and significance of this dependence, and to study the modifications of the language and the thought as they passed through the alembic of Persius's brain, than to multiply examples of words and phrases that are common, not only to Horace and Persius, but to the language of every-day life. Indeed, some go so far as to make Persius quibble on Horace; and 'How green you are,' of the modern street, and 'What means that trump?' of the modern card-table, are as much Shakespearian as some of Persius's 'borrowings' are Horatian.

Horace had long been a classic when Persius dodged his school-tasks and was a dab at marbles. Indeed, nothing is more remarkable about Roman literature than the rapidity with which the images of its Augustan heroes took on the patina of age. The half-century that lay between Horace and Persius drew itself out to a distant perspective, and Virgil and Horace had all the authority of veteres. They not only dictated the forms of poetry, but permeated and dominated prose. True, the hostility to Virgil and Horace had not ceased; the antiquarii were not dead; but the ground had been shifted. The admirers of republican poetry in the time of Horace were republicans—in the time of Persius they were imperialists, and the maintenance of the authors of the Augustan age as the true classics was a part of the programme of the opposition. The court literature of the Neronian period found its models in the earlier epic essays of Catullus rather than in the poems of Virgil. Virgil had modified the Greek norms to suit the Latin tongue; but these men went back of malice aforethought to the Greek standard, and emulated the proportions of the Greek versification of the Alexandrian period. They were impatient of the classic vocabulary, and found the classic rhythms tame, and so they betook themselves to the earlier language and set it to more exact harmonies. It was no heresy with this set to consider Virgil at once light and rough. The mouth-filling words of the older and bolder period, marshaled in serried ranks, no gap, no break, as they kept time to a rhythmical cadence that was marked by all the music of consonance and assonance—this was the ideal of the school which Persius assailed, just as an admirer of Pope or Goldsmith might assail the dominant poetry of our day, with its sensuous melody and its revived archaisms. Surely the worshippers of recent poets might pause before accepting the narrow literary creed of Persius. But, not to imitate the example of Nisard, and indulge in dangerous parallelisms, it is sufficient for our purpose to note that Persius's close study of the language of Horace was not only a part of a liberal education, but a necessity of the school to which he belonged. If he was to write satire at all, he must needs take Horace for his model. If he had written an epic, he would have taken Virgil.

xxiv

xxv

Besides this, we may boldly say that reminiscence is no robbery. The verses, the phrases, the arguments that we know by heart often become so wholly ours that they weave themselves unconsciously into the texture of our speech. We use them as convenient forms of expression, without the least thought of plagiarism. We quote them, thinking that they are as familiar to others as they are to ourselves. They constitute, as it were, a sympathetic medium between men of culture. And so Persius repeated group after group of the words of Horace as innocently as the Augustan poets translated their Greek models, and thought no more harm than did the Emperor Julian when he Platonized, or Thackeray when he transfused the classics that he learned at the Charter House into his own matchless English. That he did it to excess is not to be denied. He never learned the lesson of Apelles—what is enough.

Having thus briefly disposed of those turns which are common to the Latin tongue, and those which ran freely into the pen of the writer, we have now to deal with a considerable number of passages in which the memory of Persius must have lingered over the words of Horace, in which his painstaking genius has hammered the thoughts of Horace into a more compact or a more angular utterance. To the majority of readers his condensations and his amplifications will alike appear to be so many distortions of the original. So, notably, where he characterizes Horace himself, and substitutes for the simple naso adunco the puzzling excusso naso, where 'the dreams of a sick man' become the 'dreams of a sick dotard,' where 'telling straight from crooked' is twisted into 'discerning the straight line where it makes its way up between crooked lines,' and where he wrings from the natural phrase 'drink in with the ear' the odd combination 'bibulous ears.' In the longer passages the wresting is still more pronounced; and those who refuse to take into consideration the moral attitude of Persius may well wonder at the perversity with which he distorts the lines and overcharges the colors of the original. But it is tolerably evident that, with all Persius's admiration of Horace as an artist, he felt himself immeasurably superior to him morally, and looked upon these adaptations and alterations as so much gained for the effect of his discourse. The slyness of Horace might have answered well enough for his day and for the kind of vices that he reprobated, but the depth over which Persius stood gave him a more than Stoic stature. Horace might have been content with a flute; nothing less resonant than a trumpet would have suited the moral elevation of Persius. Horace is a consummate artist, and not less an artist in the conduct of his life than in the composition of his poems. Persius is the prototype of the sensational preacher, and preachers of all centuries, from Augustin and Jerome to Maclean and Merivale, have had a weakness for him.

xxvi

Aside from the moral tone, which is enough to give a different ring to the most similar expressions in the two poets, there is an artistic difference of great significance in the handling of the dramatic element, which they both recognized as fundamental in the satire. The dramatic satires of Horace will not bear dislocation without destruction. In Persius the characters are always shifting, always fading away into an impersonal Tu. This may be partly due to the interval which he allowed to elapse between the periods of composition; but it is possible that he recognized the limitation of his own powers, that his satires were intended to be a knotted thong, and not a smooth horsewhip. This piecemeal composition, be it the result of poverty or of economy, makes Persius the very author for 'Elegant Extracts.' Hence it is not hard to defend him, as it is not hard to defend Seneca, and on similar grounds. Single verses ring in the ear for months and years. What line, for instance, more quoted than xxvii

Tecum habita: noris quam sit tibi curta supellex?

What line sinks deeper than the sombre verse,

Virtutem videant intabescantque relicta?

Single scenes, whether of dialogue or of description, possess every requirement of dramatic vividness. On every page of the commentary we call him bookish, and yet his pictures stand out from the canvas with a boldness which makes us concede that his books did not keep him from seeing, if they did not teach him to see, what was going on around him. What is not a little remarkable in so young a man is the honesty of his painting. A home-keeping youth, Persius gives us living pictures of what he saw at home, whether at Rome, at Volaterrae, or at Luna; in the school-room, in the lecture-room, in the court of justice, on the wharf, at the country cross-roads. He has watched the carpenter stretching his line, the potter whirling his wheel, the physician adjusting his scales. He has heard the horse-laugh of the burly centurion, and shivered; has heard, with a young Stoic sneer, a cooing and mincing declaimer. He knows all about ink and paper and parchment and reeds; he has not outlived his knowledge of marbles, and one might fancy that the lustral spittle of his aunty was still fresh on his brow. The fact that there is no breeziness about his poems, nothing that tells us of the liberal air beyond, is another sign of his truthfulness. His life is like his own 'ever retreating bay' of the Sixth Satire, with the cliffs of Stoic philosophy between him and the wintry sea without. Arretium he knows—it was not so far from Volaterrae—and Bovillae, in the neighborhood of which he had a farm, and Luna, and the world of Rome; but the rest of his geography is in the inane. Horace, on the other hand, ambles all over Italy, and treats us every now and then to a foreign tour with the air of a man who had run across the sea in his time; and even if he who takes us in his sweeping flight from Cadiz to Ganges be not the real Juvenal, the undisputed Juvenal has a far wider geographical outlook than Persius. This very limitation is one of the best signs of the artistic worth of Persius, and justifies the regret that he had not made himself the Crabbe of Roman poetry.

xxviii

We have seen that Persius was not slavishly dependent on Horace, assimilated the material that he derived from him, raised the worldly wisdom of Horace to the ideal standard of the Stoic, and followed a different canon of dramatic art. To this we may add that Persius, with a certain aristocratic disdain of conventionalities, goes deeper into the current of vulgar diction than the freedman's son dared. Persius felt that he could afford to talk slang, and he talked it; and the commentators have found it necessary to hold Petronius in the left hand, as well as Horace in the right.

We now proceed to yet another formal element, which is no less significant to the close student of antique literature. The Roman handling of the hexameter was artificial in the extreme. Reasoning backward from the Latin hexameter, scholars have been prone to transfer the conscious symbolism of the Roman poets to the Greek originals; and if they had stopped, say, at Apollonius Rhodius, they might have been justified, for in the later Greek poets something of the sort is not to be denied. But the healthier period of Greek poetic art was lifted far above such toying adaptations of sound to sense as commentators still discover in Homer when they enlarge on the symbolism of this or that spondaic verse, the beauty of this or that combination of diaeresis and caesura. A recent comparison of Homer with his successors has shown that, of all the spondaic verses in Homer, scarcely one in a hundred can be traced to any 'picturesque' motive, and the rapid movement of so many five-dactyl hexameters is simply the normal pace of the verse. When we come to Latin metres, however, we must take a different standard, and recognize a conscious modification of the Greek rule. The Ovidian pentameter of the best period—to cite a familiar instance—is subject to minute laws, which are transgressed at every turn in Greek elegiac poetry, and the different ideals of Persius and Horace are distinctly traceable in their treatment of the hexameter. Horace, as is well known, broke the lofty movement of the hexameter to suit the easy gait of the satire. Persius is more rhetorical than Horace, and, although he admits elision with as great freedom as his master, his verse has a more mechanical structure than the verse of Horace, and many of the conversational peculiarities of the Horatian hexameter are much less conspicuous in Persius. Horace weakens the caesura, employs a great number of spondaic words, and neglects the variety at which the epic aims; and perhaps the trained ear of a determined scholar might hear in the jog-trot of his satiric rhythms the hoofs of his bob-tailed mule and the lazy flapping of his portmanteau. Persius, on the other hand, hammers out his thoughts in a far more orthodox cadence. Comparing the first six hundred and fifty verses of the first book of the satires of Horace with the six hundred and fifty verses of Persius, we find that more than eight per cent. have five spondees against less than five per cent. in Persius. The so-called third trochee or feminine caesura of the third foot is found in one of ten of Horace's hexameters, and only in one of twenty-six in Persius—a low proportion even for a Latin poet. Still more striking is the rare use which Persius makes of the masculine caesura of the sixth foot, with its consequent monosyllabic close. Aside from all idle symbolism, this arrangement, which is comparatively common in Horace, gives the verse a certain familiar roughness, especially where the final word forces a union with the following line. These diversities can not be accidents, and serve to show that, although Persius might weave himself a garment from the dyed threads of Horatian diction, he was not bold enough to wear the discincta tunica of Horace's Muse. But we must not forget to be just, and it is only fair to add that such a garb would have been as inappropriate to his severe and lofty, though narrow spirit, as the Coan vestments of Ovid's 'kept goddess'—if we may borrow the déesse entretenue of Heinrich Heine.

A comparison of Persius with Juvenal—a favorite theme with editors—does not enter into the plan of this study. It suffices for our present purpose to note that the practiced rhetorician of the time of Trajan could not have shared Quintilian's admiration of his youthful predecessor. The parallel passages which have been cited belong to the common stock of satirical strokes or to the thesaurus of proverbial phrases. Who can believe that Juvenal took usque adeo from Persius, or borrowed from him the familiar rara avis? There are three or four touches in the Tenth Satire which recall some of the more striking expressions of Persius; but Ribbeck's objections to the genuineness of this sophistic declamation, if not convincing, are at least sufficiently well founded to make us pause in citing them. In moral earnestness, Persius is as far superior to Juvenal as he is inferior to him in the rhetorical treatment of his themes; and so long as men will take into consideration this moral element, which modern critics are prone to eliminate from works of art, so long as they will say pectus est quod satiricum facit as well as quod theologum, Persius will command a personal esteem which does not attach to the satires of Juvenal. The ingenious theory of Boissier, that the great satirist of the Caesars was a snubbed snob, brings out in still more striking contrast the figure of Persius as the reserved provincial aristocrat, and may be worthy of a more ample development than it has yet received. But Juvenal is a dangerous theme. As M. Martha has admirably observed, Juvenal is an author whose declamatory tone has infected his eulogists; and those who are not carried away by an 'admiration which disfigures while it exalts,' may readily be tempted into the opposite extreme. Let us turn, then, to other matters which illustrate more directly the character of our author's compositions. And first a word or two of Stoicism.

With the strong practical tendencies of the Romans, the only systems of Greek philosophy that ever found large acceptance at Rome were the Epicurean and the Stoic; and in the Stoic school the only doctrines that commanded much attention were the ethic. The subtle dialectic of the Stoics, of which we have some unjoyous specimens in Cicero's philosophical compilations, was not congenial to the Roman mind; but the Stoic creed was the creed of the nobler spirits of the imperial time. Excluded from public life, or, at all events, from the satisfactory exercise of public functions, the elect few took refuge in Stoic philosophy.*

* In this section of the Introduction I follow Zeller's Essay on Marcus Aurelius (Vorträge u. Abhandlungen) so closely that some special acknowledgment seems to be necessary.

The object of Stoicism is by means of virtue and knowledge to make men independent of all without them, and happy in that independence. It is a pantheism: God revealed in every thing;

God's law recognized in every thing; God the substance from which every thing proceeds, to which every thing returns; the Original Fire, from which every thing is born again. God is the all-pervasive Spirit, Fate, Providence. Obedience to his eternal laws constitutes virtue and happiness. Good and evil are to be measured by this standard. All that brings us toward this is Good; all that carries us away from it is Evil. Every thing else is indifferent.

In Grace or out of Grace, says the Christian; or, as Calvin expresses it in his nervous language, Qui Christum dimidium habere vult, totum perdit. In Virtue or out of Virtue, says the Stoic. There is nothing between. The wise are perfectly wise; the foolish are totally foolish. 'There is not a half-ounce of rectitude in the fool.' The vicious man is as mad as Orestes—nay, madder.

The difference between human beings is slight. Alkibiades, the high-born and the handsome, is no better than shriveled old Baukis, who makes her livelihood by selling greens. All external distinctions sink into utter insignificance by the side of this great contrast of knowledge and ignorance into which virtue and vice are resolved.

All humanity is one people; all the world one state; its ruler the Deity; its constitution the eternal law of the universe. The more unconditionally a man submits to the guidance of this law, the more exclusively he seeks his happiness in virtue, the more independent he will be of all without him, the more contented in himself, and yet the readier to enter into communion with others, and to do his duty to the whole of which he is a part.

But it is to be observed that the Stoicism of Persius, like the Stoicism of Marcus Antoninus, was of a softer, milder, more religious character than that of Zeno and Chrysippus; and when the Stoic discourses on the nothingness of all earthly things, the ills of life, man's moral weakness, and his need of help, we hear language that reminds us now of the epistles of the New Testament, now of the doctrines of Buddha. 'The philosopher,' says Zeller, 'is a physician for the soul, a priest and servant of the Deity among men, and this he shows by the most unlimited, devoted, unreserved philanthropy.' And not only so, but the Stoic does not disdain to make life brighter in the social circle; and the Sixth Satire of our author, which Nisard considers to be a youthful escapade of the poet—qui s'évertue comme un écolier qui sort de classe—is no less truly Stoic than the high-strung Third.

In speaking of this subject it is difficult to keep from using the word religion, for the emotional element, which is so characteristic of religion, is not wanting in a system which is the popular synonym for suppression of emotion. This is the thesis which M. Martha has brought out into clear relief, and illumined by many apposite examples—a thesis which will not be strange to those who have studied with any care the social aspects of the later life of antiquity. Under the empire morality was more than morality—it was a religion; and all the formulae of certain phases of Christian ascetics may be applied to the ethical side of Stoic philosophy. It is difficult to approach the subject without seeming irreverence; but the faith of the Christian must be far from robust who can shrink from a parallel that goes no farther than the machinery—that does not involve the motive power. It is not the aim of this study to determine whether this parallelism is to be recognized as a praeparatio Evangelica, or as the like result of similar forces at work in different systems of thought and belief. It is enough to present the parallelism, to excuse the phraseology.

Our ancestors, at all events, were not afraid to recognize 'natural Christians' in such men as Socrates, in such youths as Persius. Why, even Seneca figured for a long time as St. Seneca; and Jeremy Taylor was following old example when he cited the Stoic as well as the Christian code. It is only one step from the recognition of this spiritual kindred to the recognition of the practical methods of spiritual work as anticipated in the life of antiquity—practical methods which for our purposes are even better described by an unbeliever like Lucian than by a believer like Marcus Antoninus. In that age of transition we find father confessors, private chaplains, mendicant friars, missions, revivals, conversions, ecstasies—all showing the deep needs of the human heart, which refused to be satisfied with the outworn gods of the Pantheon, and, in ignorance of the divine Person, who alone can answer a personal love, sought solace in the mechanism of morality. In characterizing Cornutus, I have already borrowed a phrase from M. Martha, and called him, as M. Martha calls Seneca, a spiritual director; and I have already ventured to call Persius a sensational preacher. His stock of philosophy or theology is not as large as some commentators suppose; and all the elaborate attempts to show by the satires that Persius was a thoroughly trained and consistent Stoic have failed. The most elementary knowledge of Stoic ethics is sufficient for the comprehension of Persius. Whatever else he knew he kept back for practical considerations. He sticks to the marrow of morality, and reiterates the cardinal doctrines of Stoicism with the vehemence of a Poundtext. This vehemence, this enthusiasm, may be explained by his youth, his Etruscan blood, his profession as a moral reformer. A critic with M. Taine's resources might account for it by the climate of Volaterrae; but, however it may be accounted for, certain it is that he himself is much impressed with the profundity of the doctrines which he professes; that he warms and glows as he imparts to his auditors the great secret that they are not free because they are slaves to vice; that a man who does not understand his relations to his Maker can not move a finger without sinning; that in the flesh there is no good thing; and that the anguish of a tortured conscience is the worst of hells. But the difficulties of Persius are not due to recondite Stoic thought, and can not be cleared up by reference to Stoic philosophy. The trouble lies in the slangy expressions, the lack of organic development, the restless zeal to force his message home to the heart of every hearer, and the consequent shifting of the personages of his dialogue to suit the cases as they rose before his mind.

Persius, then, was a preacher of Stoicism—Stoicism, at once the philosophy and the religion of a time when serious and noble natures had no city of refuge except in their inmost selves, when the only possible activity seemed to be submission to the inevitable. The hydrostatic pressure of the imperial time forced all the better elements into this mould; and in so far Persius bears the stamp of his period, and the very absence of political and personal allusions shows how imperfect life must have been. But one school of commentators, headed by Casaubon, and represented to-day in Germany by Lehmann, in England by Pretor, see in Persius much more than a disciple of the Stoa; and the satires of our author—especially the First and Fourth—are supposed to be full of more or less oblique references to Nero's person, his habits, his literary pretensions, his aristocratic birth. At one time it seemed as if this thesis, which was suggested by the scholiast, had been abandoned, but the field for historical ingenuity is too tempting; and one of the vaguest of all the satires, the Fifth, has been discovered by Lehmann to be full of the most stinging allusions to Nero. It is not enough to grant to this school that Nero, as the type of his age, may have been present to the mind of the author. They scornfully reject this concession, and resort to all manner of legerdemain in order to explain away the impossibilities of such an attack and the improbabilities of its execution. With such scope as these scholars allow themselves we may find parallels every where, and covert assaults may be detected in the most innocent literary performances. But it would not answer the purpose of this Introduction to enter into an elaborate discussion of this question, which seems to be destined to an uncomfortable resurrection as often as it is laid. Every plausible coincidence has been mentioned in the Notes, and it will be sufficient for ingenuous youth to know the opinions of distinguished scholars on the subject.

xxxiii

xxxiv

xxxv

xxxvi

If this essay had not been prolonged beyond the limit proposed, it might be well to give some account of the grammatical and rhetorical peculiarities of the style of Persius; but the grammar of Persius will present few difficulties to those who are at all familiar with the poetic syntax of the Latin language; and enough has been said to prepare the student, in a measure, for coping with the labored terseness of our author.

xxxvii

The manuscripts of Persius are remarkable for their age, their number, and the stupid bewilderment of the transcribers. The best is the Codex Montepessulanus, or Montpellier manuscript, with which the Codex Vaticanus closely coincides; but, in the words of Jahn, Nullus Persii codex tantae auctoritatis est ut in rebus dubiis eius vestigia tuto sequaris sed semper inter complures optio eaque non raro incerta datur.

A. PERSII FLACCI SATURARUM

38

LIBER.

Each visible line number—generally a multiple of 5—is a link to the Notes. Words referenced in the Critical Appendix are individually marked. All Notes and Appendix entries link back to the text. Cross-references within the Notes link either to text lines or to Notes on those lines, as appropriate.

39

Notes

PROLOGUS.

- Nec fonte labra prolui caballino, nec in bicipiti somniasse Parnaso memini, ut repente sic poeta prodirem.
Heliconidasque pallidamque Pirenen 5 illis remitto, quorum imagines lambunt hederae sequaces: ipse semipaganus ad sacra vaturn carmen adfero nostrum.
quis expedit psittaco suum chaere picamque docuit nostra verba conari?
10 magister artis ingenique largitor venter, negatas artifex sequi voces; quod si dolosi spes refulserit nummi, corvos poetas et poetridas picas cantare credas Pegaseium nectar.

40

Notes

SATURA I.

O curas hominum! o quantum est in rebus inane!
'Quis leget haec?' Min tu istud ais? nemo hercule! 'Nemo?' Vel duo, vel nemo. 'Turpe et miserabile!' Quare?
ne mihi Polydamas et Troiades Labeonem 5 praetulerint? nugae. non, si quid turbida Roma elevator, accedas examenque inprobum in illa castiges trutina, nec te quaesiveris extra.
nam Romae quis non—? a, si fas dicere—sed fas 10 tum, cum ad canitiem et nostrum istud vivere triste aspexi ac nucibus facimus quaecumque relictis, cum sapimus patruos; tunc, tunc, ignoscite—'Nolo.'
Quid faciam? sed sum petulanti splene cachinno.

Scribimus inclusi, numeros ille, his pede liber, grande aliquid, quod pulmo animae praelargus anhelet.
15 scilicet haec populo pexusque togaque recenti et natalicia tandem cum sardonyche albus sede leges celsa, liquido cum plasmate guttur mobile collueris, patranti fractus ocello.
hic neque more probo videas nec voce serena 20 ingentis trepidare Titos, cum carmina lumbum intran, et tremulo scalpuntur ubi intima versu.
tun, vetule, auriculis alienis colligis escas?
auriculis, quibus et dicas cute perditus ohe.

'Quo didicisse, nisi hoc fermentum et quae semel intus 25 innata est rupto iecore exierit caprificus?'

En pallor seniumque! o mores! usque adeone scire tuum nihil est, nisi te scire hoc sciat alter?
'At pulchrum est digito monstrari et dicier hic est!

ten cirrorum centum dictata fuisse 30 pro nihilo pendas?' Ecce inter pocula quaerunt Romulidae saturi, quid dia poemata narrent.
hic aliquis, cui circa umeros hyacinthia laena est, rancidulum quiddam balba de nare locutus, Phyllidas Hypsipylas, vatum et plorabile si quid, 35 eliquat ac tenero supplantat verba palato.

adsensere viri: nunc non cinis ille poetae felix? non levior cippus nunc inprimit ossa?
laudant convivae: nunc non e manibus illis, nunc non e tumulo fortunataque favilla 40 nascentur violae? 'Rides' ait 'et nimis uncis naribus indulges. an erit qui velle recuset os populi meruisse et cedro digna locutus linquere nec scombros metuentia carmina nec tus?'

Quisquis es, o, modo quem ex adverso dicere feci, 45 non ego cum scribo, si forte quid aptius exit, quando haec rara avis est, si quid tamen aptius exit, laudari metuam, neque enim mihi cornea fibra est;
sed recti finemque extremumque esse recuso euge tuum et belle. nam belle hoc excute totum:

50 quid non intus habet? non hic est Ilias Atti ebria veratro? non si qua elegidia crudi dictarunt proceres? non quidquid denique lectis scribitur in citreis? calidum seis ponere sumen, 54 scis comitem horridulum trita donare lacerna, et 'verum' inquis 'amo: verum mihi dicite de me.'
qui pote? vis dicam? nugaris, cum tibi, calve, pinguis aqualiculus protenso sesquipede exstet.

o Iane, a tergo quem nulla ciconia pinsit, nec manus auriculas imitari mobilis albas, 60 nec linguae, quantum, sitiati canis Apula, tantae!
vos, o patricius sanguis, quos vivere fas est occipiti caeco, posticae occurrите sannae!

Quis populi sermo est? quis enim, nisi carmina molli nunc demum numero fluere, ut per leve severos 65 effundat iunctura unguis? scit tendere versum non secus ac si oculo rubricam derigat uno.
sive opus in mores, in luxum, in prandia regum dicere, res grandis nostro dat Musa poetae.

ecce modo heroas sensus adferre videmus 70 nugari solitos graece, nec ponere lucum artifices nec rus saturum laudare, ubi corbes et focus et porci et fumosa Palilia faeno, unde Remus, sulcoque terens dentalia, Quinti, cum trepida ante boves dictatorem induit uxor 75 et tua aratra domum lictor tulit—euge poeta!

est nunc Brisaei quem venosus liber Acci, sunt quos Pacuviusque et verrucosa moretur Antiope, aerumnis cor luctificabile fulta.
80 hos pueris monitus patres infundere lippos cum videas, quaerisne, unde haec sartago loquendi venerit in linguas, unde istuc dedecus, in quo trossulus exsultat tibi per subsellia levis?
nilne pudet capiti non posse pericula cano pellere, quin tepidum hoc optes audire decenter?
85 'Fur es' ait Pedio. Pedius quid? crimina rasis librat in antithetis: doctas posuisse figuras laudatur 'bellum hoc!' hoc bellum? an, Romule, ceves?
men moveat? quippe et, cantet si naufragus, assem protulerim. cantas, cum fracta te in trabe pictum 90 ex umero portes? verum, nec nocte paratum plorabit, qui me volet incurvasse querela.
'Sed numeris decor est et iunctura addita crudis.
cludere sic versum didicit Berecynthius Attis et qui caeruleum dirimebat Nerea delphin 95 sic costam longo subduximus Appennino.
Arma virum, nonne hoc spumosum et cortice pingui, ut ramale vetus vegrandi subere coctum?
'Quidnam igitur tenerum et laxa cervice legendum?
Torva mimalloneis inplerunt cornua bombis, 100 et raptum vitulo caput ablatura superbo Bassaris et lyncem Maenas flexura corymbis ehion ingeminat, reparabilis adsonat echo?'
haec fierent, si testiculi vena ulla paterni viveret in nobis? summa delumbe saliva 105 hoc natat in labris, et in udo est Maenas et Attis, nec pluteum caedit, nec demorsos sapit unguis.
'Sed quid opus teneras mordaci radere vero auriculas? vide sis, ne maiorum tibi forte limina frigescant: sonat hic de nare canina 110 littera.' Per me equidem sint omnia protinus alba; nil moror. euge! omnes, omnes bene mirae eritis res.
hoc iuvat? 'hic' inquis 'veto quisquam faxit oletum.' pinge duos anguis: pueri, sacer est locus, extra meite! discedo. secuit Lucilius urbem, 115 te Lupe, te Muci, et genuinum fregit in illis; omne vafer vitium ridenti Flaccus amico tangit et admissus circum praecordia ludit, callidus excusso populum suspendere naso: 119 men muttire nefas? nec clam, nec cum scrobe? nusquam?
hic tamen infodiam. vidi, vidi ipse, libelle:
auriculas asini quis non habet? hoc ego opertum, hoc ridere meum, tam nil, nulla tibi vendo Iliade. audaci quicumque adflante Cratino 125 iratum Eupolidem praegrandi cum sene palles, aspice et haec, si forte aliquid decoctius audis.
inde vaporata lector mihi ferveat aure:
non hic, qui in crepidas Graiorum ludere gestit sordidus, et lusco qui possit dicere 'lusce,' sese aliquem credens, Italo quod honore supinus 130 fregerit heminas Arreti aedilis iniquas; nec qui abaco numeros et secto in pulvere metas scit risisse vafer, multum gaudere paratus, si cynico barbam petulans nonaria vellat.
his mane edictum, post prandia Calliroen do.

43

44

45

Notes

SATURA II.

Hunc, Macrine, diem numera meliore lapillo qui tibi labentis apponit candidus annos. funde merum genio. non tu prece poscis emaci, quae nisi seductis nequeas committere divis; 5 at bona pars procerum tacita libabit acerra.
haud cuivis promptum est murmurque humilisque susurros tollere de templis et aperto vivere voto.
'Mens bona, fama, fides' haec clare et ut audiat hospes; illa sibi introrsum et sub lingua murmurat 'o si 10 ebulliat patruus, praeclarum funus?' et 'o si sub rastro crepet argenti mihi seria dextro

Hercule! pupillumve utinam, quem proximus heres inpello, expungam! namque est scabiosus et acri bile tumet. Nerio iam tertia conditur uxor.
 15 haec sancte ut poscas, Tiberino in gurgite mergis mane caput bis terque et noctem flumine purgas?
 heus age, responde—minimum est quod scire laboro—de Iove quid sentis? estne ut praeponere cures hunc—‘cuinam?’ cuinam? vis Staio? an scilicet haeres?
 20 quis potior index, puerisve quis aptior orbis?
 hoc igitur, quo tu Iovis aurem inpellere temptas, dic agedum Staio, ‘pro Iuppiter! o bone’ clamet ‘Iuppiter!’ at sese non clamet Iuppiter ipse?
 25 ignovisse putas, quia, cum tonat, ocius ilex sulphure discutitur sacro quam tuque domusque?
 an quia non fibris ovium Ergennaque iubente triste iaces lucis evitandumque bidental, idcirco stolidam praebet tibi vellere barbam Iuppiter? aut quidnam est, qua tu mercede deorum 30 emeris auriculas? pulmone et lactibus unctis?
 Ecce avia aut metuens divum matertera cunis exemit puerum frontemque atque uda labella infami digito et lustralibus ante salivis expiat, urentis oculos inhibere perita; 35 tunc manibus quatit et spem macram supplice voto nunc Licini in campos, nunc Crassi mittit in aedis ‘hunc optet generum rex et regina! puellae hunc rapiant! quidquid calcaverit hic, rosa fiat!’
 ast ego nutrici non mando vota: negato, 40 Iuppiter, haec illi, quamvis te albata rogarit.
 Poscis opem nervis corpusque fidele senectae.
 esto age; sed grandes patinae tucetaque crassa adnuere his superos vetuere Iovemque morantur.
 Rem struere exoptas caeso bove Mercuriumque 45 arcessis fibra ‘da fortunare Penatis, da pecus et gregibus fetum!’ quo, pessime, pacto, tot tibi cum in flammis iunicum omenta liquescant et tamen hic extis et opimo vincere ferti intendit ‘iam crescit ager, iam crescit ovile, 50 iam dabitur, iam iam!’ donec deceptus et exspes nequiquam fundo suspiret nummus in imo.
 Si tibi creterras argenti incusaque pingui auro dona feram, sudes et pectore laevo excutiat guttas laetari praetrepidum cor.
 55 hinc illud subiit, auro sacras quod ovato perducis facies; nam fratres inter aenos somnia pituita qui purgatissima mittunt, praecipui sunt sitque illis aurea barba.
 aurum vasa Numae Saturniaque inpulit aera 60 Vestalisque urnas et Tuscum fictile mutat.
 o curvae in terris animae et caelestium inanes!
 quid iuvat hoc, templis nostros inmittere mores et bona dis ex hac scelerata ducere pulpa?
 haec sibi corrupto casiam dissolvit olivo, 65 haec Calabrum coxit vitiato murice vellus, haec bacam conchae rasisse et stringere venas ferventis massae crudo de pulvere iussit. peccat et haec, peccat: vitio tamen utitur. at vos dicite, pontifices, in sancto quid facit aurum?
 70 nempe hoc quod Veneri donatae a virgine pupae.
 quin damus id superis, de magna quod dare lance non possit magni Messallae lippa propago:
 compositum ius fasque animo sanctosque recessus mentis et incoctum generoso pectus honesto.
 75 haec cedo ut admoveam templis et farre litabo.

46

47

48

Notes

SATURA III.

‘Nempe haec adsidue: iam clarum mane fenestras intrat et angustas extendit lumine rimas: stertimus indomitum quod despumare Falernum sufficiat, quinta dum linea tangitur umbra.
 5 en quid agis? siccas insana canicula messis iam dudum coquit et patula pecus omne sub ulmo est.’

unus ait comitum. "Verumne? itane? ocius adsit huc aliquis! nemon?" turgescit vitrea bilis:
 "findor"—ut Arcadiae pecuaria rudere dicas.
 10 iam liber et positis bicolor membrana capillis inque manus chartae nodosaque venit harundo.
 tunc querimur, crassus calamo quod pendeat umor, nigra quod infusa vanescat sepia lympha;
 dilutas querimur geminet quod fistula guttas.
 15 o miser inque dies ultra miser, hucine rerum venimus? at cur non potius teneroque columbo et similis regum pueris pappare minutum poscis et iratus mammae lallare recusas?
 "An tali studeam calamo?" Cui verba? quid istas 20 succinis ambages? tibi luditur. effluis amens, contemnere: sonat vitium percussa, maligne respondet viridi non cocta fidelia limo.
 udum et molle lutum es, nunc nunc properandus et acri fingendus sine fine rota. sed rure paterno 25 est tibi far modicum, purum et sine labe salinum—quid metuas?—cultrixque foci segura patella.
 hoc satis? an deceat pulmonem rumpere ventis, stemmate quod Tusco ramum millesime ducis, censoremne tuum vel quod trabeate salutas?
 30 ad populum phaleras! ego te intus et in cute novi.
 non pudet ad morem discincti vivere Nattae?
 sed stupet hic vitio et fibris increvit opimum pingue, caret culpa, nescit quid perdat, et alto 34 demersus summa rursus non bullit in unda.
 magne pater divum, saevos punire tyrannos haud alia ratione velis, cum dira libido moverit ingenium ferventi tincta veneno:
 virtutem videant intabescantque relictas.
 anne magis Siculi gemuerunt aera iuveni, 40 et magis auratis pendens laquearibus ensis purpureas subter cervices terruit, 'imus, imus praecipites' quam si sibi dicat et intus palleat infelix, quod proxima nesciat uxor?
 Saepe oculos, memini, tangebam parvus olivo, 45 grandia si nollem morituri verba Catonis discere, non sano multum laudanda magistro, quae pater adductis sudans audiret amicis.
iure; etenim id summum, quid dexter senio ferret, scire erat in voto; damnosa canicula quantum 50 raderet; angustae collo non fallier orcae;
 neu quis callidior buxum torquere flagello.
 haud tibi inexpertum curvos deprendere mores, quaeque docet sapiens bracatis inlita Medis porticus, insomnis quibus et detonsa iuventus 55 invigilat, siliquis et grandi pasta polenta; et tibi quae Samios diduxit littera ramos surgentem dextro monstravit limite callem.
 stertis adhuc, laxumque caput conpage soluta oscitat hesternum, dissutis undique malis!
 60 est aliquid quo tendis, et in quod dirigis arcum?
 an passim sequeris corvos testaque lutoque, securus quo pes ferat, atque ex tempore vivis?
 helleborum frustra, cum iam cutis aegra tumebit, poscentis videas: venienti occurrere morbo!
 65 et quid opus Cratero magnos promittere montis?
 discite, o miseri, et causas cognoscite rerum:
 quid sumus, et quidnam victuri gignimur; ordo quis datus, aut metae qua mollis flexus et unde; quis modus argento, quid fas optare, quid asper 70 utile nummus habet; patriae carisque propinquis quantum elargiri deceat; quem te deus esse iussit, et humana qua parte locatus es in re.
 disce, nec inideas, quod multa fidelia putet in locuplete penu, defensis pinguibus Umbris, 75 et piper et pernae, Marsi monumenta clientis, menaque quod prima nondum defecerit orca.
 Hic aliquis de gente hircosa centurionum dicat 'Quod sapio satis est mihi. non ego curo esse quod Arcesilas aerumnosique Solones, 80 obstipo capite et figentes lumine terram, murmura cum secum et rabiosa silentia rodunt atque exporrecto trutinantur verba labello, aegroti veteris meditantēs somnia, gigni de nihilo nihilum, in nihilum nil posse reverti.

85 hoc est, quod palles? cur quis non prandeat, hoc est?
His populus ridet, multumque torosa iuventus ingeminat tremulos naso crispante cachinnos.
'Inspice; nescio quid trepidat mihi pectus et aegris faucibus exsuperat gravis alitus; inspice, sodes!' 90 qui dicit medico, iussus requiescere, postquam tertia conpositas vidit nox currere venas, de maiore domo modice sitiēte lagoena lenia loturo sibi Surrentina rogabit.
'Heus, bone, tu palles!' "Nihil est." 'Videas tamen istuc, 95 quidquid id est: surgit tacite tibi lutea pellis.'
"At tu deterius palles; ne sis mihi tutor; iam pridem hunc sepeli: tu restas." 'Perge, tacebo.'
turgidus hic epulis atque albo ventre lavatur, guttare sulpureas lente exalante mefites; 100 sed tremor inter vina subit calidumque triental excudit e manibus, dentes crepuere relecti, uncta cadunt laxis tunc pulmentaria labris.
hinc tuba, candelaē, tandemque beatulus alto conpositus lecto crassisque lutatus amomis 105 in portam rigidas calces extendit: at illum hesterni capite induto subiere Quirites.
'Tange, miser, venas et pone in pectore dextram.
nil calet hic. summosque pedes attinge manusque.
109 non frigent.' Visa est si forte pecunia, sive candida vicini subrisit molle puella, cor tibi rite salit? positum est argente catino durum holus et populi cribro decussa farina:
temptemus fauces, tenero latet ulcus in ore putre, quod haud deceat plebeia radere beta.
115 alges, cum excussit membris timor albus aristas; nunc face supposita fervescit sanguis et ira scintillant oculi, dicisque facisque, quod ipse non sani esse hominis non sanus iuret Orestes.

52

53

Notes

SATURA IV.

'Rem populi tractas?' barbatum haec crede magistrum dicere, sorbitio tollit quem dira cicutae 'quo fretus? dic hoc, magni pupille Pericli.
scilicet ingenium et rerum prudentia velox 5 ante pilos venit, dicenda tacendaque calles.
ergo ubi commota fervet plebecula bile, fert animus calidae fecisse silentia turbae maiestate manus. quid deinde loquere? "Quirites, hoc puta non iustum est, illud male, rectius illud." 10 scis etenim iustum gemina suspendere lance ancipitis librae, rectum discernis, ubi inter curva subit, vel cum fallit pede regula varo, et potis es nigrum vitio praefigere theta.
quin tu igitur, summa nequiquam pelle decorus, 15 ante diem blando caudam iactare popello desinis, Anticyras melior sorbere meracas!
quae tibi summa boni est? uncta vixisse patella semper et adsiduo curata cuticula sole?
exspecta, haud aliud respondeat haec anus. i nunc 20 "Dinomaches ego sum," suffla "sum candidus." esto; dum ne deterius sapiat pannucia Baucis, cum bene discincto cantaverit ocima vernae.' Ut nemo in sese temptat descendere, nemo, sed praecedenti spectatur mantica tergo!
25 quaesieris 'Nostin Vettidi praedia?' "Cuius?"
'Dives arat Curibus quantum non miluus errat.'
"Hunc ais, hunc dis iratis genioque sinistro, qui, quandoque iugum pertusa ad compita figit, seriolae veterem metuens deradere limum 30 ingemit: hoc bene sit! tunicatum cum sale mordens caepe et farrata pueris plaudentibus olla pannosam faecem morientis sorbet aceti?"
at si unctus cesses et figas in cute solem,

54

35 est prope te ignotus, cubito qui tangat et acre despuat 'hi mores! penemque arcanaque lumbi runcantem populo marcentis pandere vulvas!
tu cum maxillis balanatum gausape pectas, inguinibus quare detonsus gurgulio exstat?
quinque palaestritae licet haec plantaria vellant elixasque nates labefactent forcipe adunca, non tamen ista filix ullo mansuescit aratro.' 42 caedimus inque vicem praebemus crura sagittis.
vivitur hoc pacto; sic novimus. ilia subter caecum vulnus habes; sed lato balteus auro 45 praetegit. ut mavis, da verba et decipe nervos, si potes. 'Egregium cum me vicinia dicat, non credam?' Viso si palles, inprobe, nummo, si facis in penem quidquid tibi venit amarum, 50 si puteal multa cautus vibice flagellas:
nequiquam populo bibulas donaveris aures.
respue, quod non es; tollat sua munera cerdo;
tecum habita: noris, quam sit tibi curta supellex.

55

Notes

SATURA V.

Vatibus hic mos est, centum sibi poscere voces, centum ora et linguas optare in carmina centum, fabula seu maesto ponatur hianda tragoedo, vulnera seu Parthi ducentis ab inguine ferrum.
5 'Quorsum haec? aut quantas robusti carminis offas ingeris, ut par sit centeno gutture niti?
grande locuturi nebulas Helicone legunto, si quibus aut Prognēs, aut si quibus olla Thyestae fervebit, saepe insulso cenanda Glyconi; 10 tu neque anhelanti, coquitur dum massa camino, folle premis ventos, nec clauso murmure raucus nescio quid tecum grave cornicaris inepte, nec scloppo tumidas intendis rumpere buccas.
verba togae sequeris iunctura callidus acri, 15 ore teres modico, pallentis radere mores doctus et ingenuo culpam defigere ludo.
hinc trahe quae dicis, mensasque relinque Mycenis cum capite et pedibus, plebeiaque prandia noris.' 20 Non equidem hoc studeo, bullatis ut mihi nugis pagina turgescat, dare pondus idonea fumo.
secreti loquimur; tibi nunc hortante Camena excutienda damus praecordia, quantaque nostrae pars tua sit, Cornute, animae, tibi, dulcis amice, ostendisse iuvat: pulsa, dinoscere cautus, 25 quid solidum crepet et pictae tectoria linguae.
his ego centenas ausim deposcere voces, ut, quantum mihi te sinuoso in pectore fixi, voce traham pura, totumque hoc verba resignent, quod latet arcana non enarrabile fibra.
30 Cum primum pavido custos mihi purpura cessit bullaque succinctis Laribus donata pependit; cum blandi comites totaque inpune Subura permisit sparsisse oculos iam candidus umbo; cumque iter ambiguum est et vitae nescius error 35 deducit trepidas ramosa in compita mentes, me tibi supposui: teneros tu suscipis annos Socratico, Cornute, sinu; tum fallere sollers apposita intortos extendit regula mores, et premitur ratione animus vincique laborat 40 artificemque tuo ducit sub pollice vultum.
tecum etenim longos memini consumere soles, et tecum primas epulis decerpere noctes:
unum opus et requiem pariter disponimus ambo, atque verecunda laxamus seria mensa.
45 non equidem hoc dubites, amborum foedere certo consentire dies et ab uno sidere duci nostra vel aequali suspendit tempora Libra Parca tenax veri, seu nata fidelibus hora dividit in Geminos concordia fata duorum, 50 Saturnumque gravem nostro Iove frangimus una:
nescio quod, certe est, quod me tibi temperat astrum.

56

Mille hominum species et rerum discolor usus;
 velle suum cuique est, nec voto vivitur uno.
 mercibus hic Italis mutat sub sole recenti 55 rugosum piper et pallentis grana cumini, hic satur inriguo mavult turgescere somno;
 hic campo indulget, hunc alea decoquit, ille in Venerem putris; sed cum lapidosa cheragra 60 fregerit articulos, veteris ramalia fagi, tunc crassos transisse dies lucemque palustrem et sibi iam seri vitam ingemuere relictam.
 at te nocturnis iuvat inpallescere chartis; cultor enim iuvenum purgatas inseris aures fruge Cleanthea. petite hinc puerique senesque 65 finem animo certum miserisque viatica canis!
 'Cras hoc fiet.' Idem cras fiet. 'Quid? quasi magnum nempe diem donas.' Sed cum lux altera venit, iam cras hesternum consumpsimus: ecce aliud cras egerit hos annos et semper paulum erit ultra.
 70 nam quamvis prope te, quamvis temone sub uno vertentem sese frustra sectabere cantum, cum rota posterior curras et in axe secundo.
 Libertate opus est, non hac, ut, quisque Velina Publius emeruit, scabiosum tesserula far 75 possidet. heu steriles veri, quibus una Quiritem vertigo facit! hic Dama est non tressis agaso, vappa lippus et in tenui farragine mendax:
 verterit hunc dominus, momento turbinis exit Marcus Dama. papae! Marco spondente recusas 80 credere tu nummos? Marco sub iudice palles?
 Marcus dixit: ita est; adsigna, Marce, tabellas.
 haec mera libertas; hoc nobis pillea donant!
 'An quisquam est alius liber, nisi ducere vitam cui licet, ut voluit? licet ut volo vivere: non sum 85 liberior Bruto?' "Mendose colligis," inquit stoicus hic aurem mordaci lotus aceto
 "haec reliqua accipio; licet illud et ut volo tolle."
 'Vindicta postquam meus a praetore recessi, cur mihi non liceat, iussit quodcumque voluntas, 90 excepto si quid Masuri rubrica vetavit?'
 Disce, sed ira cadat naso rugosaque sanna, dum veteres avias tibi de pulmone revello.
 non praetoris erat stultis dare tenuia rerum officia atque usum rapidae permittere vitae: 95 sambucam citius caloni aptaveris alto.
 stat contra ratio et secretam garrit in aurem, ne liceat facere id quod quis vitiabit agendo.
 publica lex hominum naturaque continet hoc fas, ut teneat vetitos inscitia debilis actus.
 100 diluis helleborum, certo conpescere puncto nescius examen: vetat hoc natura medendi.
navem si poscat sibi peronatus arator, luciferi rudis, exclamet Melicerta perisse frontem de rebus. tibi recto vivere talo 105 ars dedit, et veri speciem dinoscere calles, ne qua subaerato mendosum tinniat anro?
 quaeque sequenda forent, quaeque evitanda vicissim, illa prius creta, mox haec carbone notasti?
 es modicus voti? presso lare? dulcis amicis?
 110 iam nunc astringas, iam nunc granaria laxes, inque luto fixum possis transcendere nummum, nec glutto sorbere salivam Mercurialem?
 'haec mea sunt, teneo' cum vere dixeris, esto liberque ac sapiens praetoribus ac Iove dextro, 115 sin tu, cum fueris nostrae paulo ante farinae, pelliculam veterem retines et fronte politus astutam vapido servas sub pectore vulpem, quae dederam supra relego funemque reduco:
 nil tibi concessit ratio; digitum exsere, peccas, 120 et quid tam parvum est? sed nullo ture litabis, haereat in stultis brevis ut semuncia recti.
 haec miscere nefas; nec, cum sis cetera fossor, tris tantum ad numeros satyrum moveare Bathylli.
 'Liber ego.' Unde datum hoc sentis, tot subdite rebus?
 125 an dominum ignoras, nisi quem vindicta relaxat?
 'I puer et strigiles Crispini ad balnea defer!'

si increpuit, 'cessas nugator;' servitium acre te nihil impellit, nec quicquam extrinsecus intrat, quod nervos agitet; sed si intus et in iecore aegro 130 nascuntur domini, qui tu inpunitior exis atque hic, quem ad strigiles scutica et metus egit erilis?
 Mane piger stertis. 'Surge!' inquit Avaritia 'heia surge!' Negas; instat 'Surge!' inquit. "Non queo." 'Surge!'
 "Et quid agam?" 'Rogitas? en saperdam advehe Ponto, 135 castoreum, stuppas, hebenum, tus, lubrica Coa; tolle recens primus piper ex sitiente camelo;
 verte aliquid; iura.' "Sed Iuppiter audiet." 'Eheu!
varo, regustatum digito terebrare salinum contentus perages, si vivere cum Iove tendis!' 60 140 iam pueris pellem succinctus et oenophorum aptas
 'Ocius ad navem!' nihil obstat, quin trabe vasta Aegaeum rapias, ni sollers Luxuria ante seductum moneat 'Quo deinde, insane, ruis? quo?
 quid tibi vis? calido sub pectore mascula bilis 145 intumuit, quod non exstinxerit urna cicutae?
 tu mare transilias? tibi torta cannabe fulto cena sit in transtro, Veientanumque rubellum exalet vapida laesum pice sessilis obba?
 quid petis? ut nummi, quos hic quincunce modesto 150 nutrieras, pergant avidos sudare deunces?
 indulge genio, carpamus dulcia! nostrum est quod vivis; cinis et manes et fabula fies.
 vive memor leti! fugit hora; hoc quod loquor inde est.'
 en quid agis? duplici in diversum scinderis hamo.
 155 huncine, an hunc sequeris? subeas alternus oportet ancipiti obsequio dominos, alternus oberres.
 nec tu, cum obstiteris semel instantique negaris parere imperio, 'rupi iam vincula' dicas; nam et luctata canis nodum abripit; et tamen illi, 160 cum fugit, a collo trahitur pars longa catenae.
 'Dave, cito, hoc credas iubeo, finire dolores praeteritos meditor.' crudum Chaerestratus unguem adrodens ait haec 'an siccis dedecus obstem cognatis? an rem patriam rumore sinistro 165 limen ad obscenum frangam, dum Chrysidis udas ebrius ante fores exstincta cum face canto?'
 "Euge, puer, sapias, dis depellentibus agnam percute." 'Sed censen plorabit, Dave, relicta?'
 "Nugaris; solea, puer, obiurgabere rubra.
 170 ne trepidare velis atque artos rodere casses!
 nunc ferus et violens; at si vocet, haud mora, dicas: Quidnam igitur faciam? nec nunc, cum arcessat et ultro supplicet, accedam? Si totus et integer illinc exieras, nec nunc." hic hic, quod quaerimus, hic est, 175 non in festuca, lictor quam iactat ineptus.
 ius habet ille sui palpo, quem ducit hiantem cretata ambitio? vigila et ciceringere large rixanti populo, nostra ut Floralia possint aprici meminisse senes: quid pulchrius? at cum 180 Herodis venere dies, unctaque fenestra dispositae pinguem nebulam vomuere lucernae portantes violas, rubrumque amplexa catinum cauda natat thynni, tumet alba fidelia vino:
 labra moves tacitus recutitaque sabbata palles.
 185 tum nigri lemures ovoque pericula rupto, tum grandes galli et cum sistro lusca sacerdos incussere deos infantis corpora, si non praedictum ter mane caput gustaveris alli.
 Dixeris haec inter varicosos centuriones, 190 continuo crassum ridet Pulfennius ingens, et centum Graecos curto centusse licetur.

60

61

62

Notes

SATURA VI.

Admovit iam bruma foco te, Basse, Sabino?
 iamne lyra et tetrico vivunt tibi pectine chordae?
 mire opifex numeris veterum primordia vocum atque marem strepitum fidis intendisse Latinae, 5 mox juvenes agitare iocis et pollice honesto egregius luisse senes. mihi nunc Ligus ora intepet hibernatque meum mare, qua latus ingens dant scopuli et multa litus se valle receptat.

 10 Lunai portum, est operae, cognoscite, cives!
 cor iubet hoc Enni, postquam destertuit esse Maeonides, Quintus pavone ex Pythagoreo.
 hic ego securus vulgi et quid praeparet auster infelix pecori, securus et angulus ille 15 vicini nostro quia pinguior, etsi adeo omnes ditescant orti peioribus, usque recusem curvus ob id minui senio aut cenare sine uncto, et signum in vapida naso tetigisse lagoena.
 discrepet his alius! geminos, horoscope, varo producis genio. solis natalibus est qui 20 tingat holus siccum muria vafer in calice empta, ipse sacrum inrorans patinae piper; hic bona dente grandia magnanimus peragit puer. utar ego, utar, nec rhombos ideo libertis ponere lautus, nec tenuis sollers turdarum nosse salivas.
 25 messe tenus propria vive et granaria, fas est, emole; quid metuis? occa, et seges altera in herba est.
 ast vocat officium: trabe rupta Bruttia saxa prendit amicus inops, remque omnem surdaque vota condidit Ionio; iacet ipse in litore et una 30 ingentes de puppe dii, iamque obvia mergis costa ratis lacerae. nunc et de caespite vivo frange aliquid, largire inopi, ne pictus oberret caerulea in tabula. 'Sed cenam funeris heres negleget, iratus quod rem curtaveris; urnae 35 ossa inodora dabit, seu spirent cinnama surdum, seu ceraso peccent casiae, nescire paratus.
tune bona incolumis minuas? et Bestius urguet doctores Graios: Ita fit, postquam sapere urbi cum pipere et palmis venit nostrum hoc maris expers; 40 fenisecae crasso vitiarunt unguine pultes.
 Haec cinere ulterior metuas? At tu, meus heres quisquis eris, paulum a turba seductior audi. o bone, num ignoras? missa est a Caesare laurus insignem ob cladem Germanae pubis, et aris 45 frigidus excutitur cinis, ac iam postibus arma, iam chlamydes regum, iam lutea gausapa captis essedaque ingentesque locat Caesonia Rhenos.
 dis igitur genioque ducis centum paria ob res egregie gestas induco; quis vetat? aude.
 50 vae, nisi conives! oleum artocreasque popello largior; an prohibes? dic clare! 'Non adeo,' inquis 'exossatus ager iuxta est.' Age, si mihi nulla iam reliqua ex amitis, patruelis nulla, proneptis nulla manet patrui, sterilis matertera vixit, 55 deque avia nihilum superest, accedo Bovillas clivumque ad Virbi, praesto est mihi Manius heres.
 'Progenies terrae?' Quaere ex me, quis mihi quartus sit pater: haud prompte, dicam tamen; adde etiam unum, unum etiam: terrae est iam filius, et mihi ritu 60 Manius hic generis prope maior avunculus exit.
 qui prior es, cur me in decursu lampada poscis?
 sum tibi Mercurius; venio deus huc ego ut ille pingitur; an renuis? vin tu gaudere relictis?
 'Dest aliquid summae.' Minui mihi; sed tibi totum est, 65 quidquid id est. ubi sit, fuge quaerere, quod mihi quondam legarat Tadius, neu dicta repone paterna: Faenoris accedat merces; hinc exime sumptus.
quid reliquum est? Reliquum? nunc, nunc inpensius ungue, ungue, puer, caules! mihi festa luce coquetur 70 urtica et fissa fumosum sinciput aure, ut tuus iste nepos olim satur anseris extis, cum morosa vago singultiet inguine vena, patriciae inmeiat vulvae? mihi trama figurae sit reliqua, ast illi tremat omento popa venter?
 75 vende animam lucro, mercare atque excute sollers omne latus mundi, nec sit praestantior alter Cappadocas rigida pinguis plausisse castata:
 rem duplica. 'Feci; iam triplex, iam mihi quarto, iam deciens redit in rugam: depunge, ubi sistam.' 80 Inventus, Chryssippe, tui finitor acervi.

VITA A. PERSII FLACCI

DE COMMENTARIO PROBI VALERII SUBLATA.

- 5 A. Persius Flaccus natus est pridie nonas Decembris | Fabio Persico L. Vitellio coss. decessit VIII kalendas | Decembris P. Mario Asinio Gallo coss. ||
natus est in Etruria Volaterris, eques Romanus, sanguine | et affinitate primi ordinis viris coniunctus. decessit | ad octavum miliarium in via Appia in praediis | suis.
- 10 pater eum Flaccus pupillum reliquit moriens annorum || fere sex. Fulvia Sisennia mater nupsit postea | Fusio equiti Romano et eum quoque extulit inter | paucos annos.
studuit Flaccus usque ad annum XII aetatis suae | Volaterris, inde Romae apud 15 grammaticum Remmum || Palaemonem et apud rhetorem Verginium Flavum. | cum esset annorum XVI, amicitia coepit uti Annaei | Cornuti, ita ut ab eo nusquam discederet. inductus | aliquatenus in philosophiam est.
- 20 amicos habuit a prima adulescentia Caesium Bassum || poetam et Calpurnium Staturam, qui vivo eo iuvenis | decessit. coluit ut patrem Servilium Nonianum. cognovit | per Cornutum etiam Annaeum Lucanum, aequaeuum | auditorem Cornuti. [nam Cornutus illo tempore ||| tragicus fuit sectae stoicae. sed] Lucanus adeo mirabatur | scripta Flacci, ut vix retineret se recitantem clamore, | quin illa [esse] vera poemata diceret, etsi ipse | sua ludos faceret. sero cognovit et Senecam, sed non | ut caperetur eius ingenio. usus est apud Cornutum | duorum convictu virorum et doctissimorum et
5 sanctissimorum, || acriter tum philosophantium, Claudii Agathemeri, | medici, Lacedaemonii, et Petronii Aristocratis, | Magnetis, quos unice miratus est et aemulatus, cum aequales | essent, Cornuti minores et ipsi.
- 10 idem etiam decem fere annos summe dilectus a Paeto || Thrasea est, ita ut peregrinaretur quoque cum eo aliquando, | cognatam eius Arriam habente uxorem.
fuit morum lenissimorum, verecundiae virginalis, | formae pulchrae, pietatis erga
15 matrem et sororem et | amitam exemplo sufficientis. || fuit frugi et pudicus.
reliquit circa HS vicies matri et sorori. scriptis tamen | ad matrem codicillis Cornuto rogavit ut daret sestertia, | ut quidam, centum, ut alii volunt et argenti facti | pondo viginti et libros circa septingentos Chrysippi sive || bibliothecam suam omnem. verum Cornutus sublatis | libris pecuniam [sororibus, quas heredes frater fecerat] | reliquit.
- 20 et raro et tarde scripsit. hunc ipsum librum imperfectum | reliquit. versus aliqui dempti sunt ultimo libro, || ut quasi finitus esset. leviter retractavit Cornutus | et Caesio Basso petenti, ut ipsi cederet, tradidit edendum. ||| scripsit etiam Flaccus in pueritia praetextam † vescio | et hodoeporicon librum unum et paucos in socrum | Thraseae [in Arriae matrem] versus, quae se | ante virum occiderat. omnia ea auctor fuit Cornutus |
5 matri eius ut aboleret. ||
editum librum continuo mirari et diripere homines | coepere.
decessit autem vitio stomachi anno aetatis XXX.
- 10 sed mox ut a scholis et magistris divertit, lecto libro | Lucilii decimo vehementer saturas componere instituit. || cuius libri principium imitatus est, sibi primo, mox omnibus | detracturus cum tanta recentium poetarum et oratorum | insectatione, ut etiam Neronem [illius temporis | principem] culpaverit. cuius versus in Neronem cum |
15 ita se haberet 'auriculas asini Mida rex habet,' in eum || modum a Cornuto, Persio iam tum mortuo, est commutatus | 'auriculas asini quis non habet?' ne hoc Nero in | se dictum arbitraretur.
- 20 QUINTILIANUS X, 1, 94 multum et verae gloriae | quamvis uno libro Persius meruit. ||
MARTIALIS IV, 9, 7
Saepius in libro numeratur Persius uno, quam levis in tota Marsus Amazonide.
- 25 IOANNES LYDUS DE MAG. I, 41 Πέρσιος δὲ | τὸν ποιητὴν Σώφρονα μιμήσασθαι θέλω τὸ Λυκόφρονος || παρῆλθεν ἀμαύρον.

66

67

ARGUMENT.—I never drank of Hippocrene, never dreamed on Parnassus. The maids of Helicon and the waters of Pirene are meat and drink for my masters—the acknowledged classics—not for me, a poor lay-brother, with my humble, homely song (1-7). Others succeed: the parrot with his Greek, the pie with her Latin. They have not dreamed on Parnassus either; but they have a teacher—the great master Belly—and Sixpence is their Phoebus Apollo. Hark how they troll forth their notes! (8-14).

Alas for me! no golden Muse, no silver sixpence inspires me. Quis leget haec?

This prologue is a survival of the dramatic element of the satire, as Casaubon has remarked. Peculiarly personal, the prologue is found in the earlier and in the later stages of art, in ballad literature and in reflective poetry. The spurious verses which precede the Aeneid—Ille ego—were intended to serve as a prologue, and prologues in prose and poetry are familiar to the readers of MARTIAL, STATIUS, AUSONIUS, and CLAUDIAN.

There is no good reason to doubt the genuineness of the prologue, or to attribute the authorship to CAESIUS BASSUS, the Editor of PERSIUS, as Heinrich has done. Nor is there any sufficient ground for supposing that the prologue is fragmentary. The two parts—of seven verses each—do not hang well together, but the connection of the thought is not so remote after all. 'In the former part, PERSIUS ridicules the pretended source of the poetical inspiration of his time, in the latter he exposes its real origin' (Teuffel).

More open to debate is the relation of the prologue to the satires. Is it an introduction to all, or only to the first? It is true that the prologue seems to belong especially to the first. Both furnish us with a programme of the poet's views, with a confession of faith which consisted in a want of faith in the age; but as the First Satire itself contains a vindication of the poet's work, and forms an introduction to the other five satires, it is safer not to restrict the prologue to the narrower office.

It is needless to say that these verses have not lacked admirers and imitators. The latter half is parodied by Milton (In Salmasii Hundredam), and the line magister artis ingenique largitor is expanded by Rabelais (4, 59).

72

The metre is the scazon or choliambus (G., 755; A., 82, 2, a, R), and as the combination of different rhythms is one of the peculiarities of the earlier satira, it is not unlikely that PERSIUS followed an older pattern. In PETRONIUS, cap. 5, the choliambus is in like manner followed by the hexameter, but the analogy is not close. The choliambus, the invention of the great lampoonist HIPPOXAX, is admirably adapted by its structure for the expression of disappointment, vexation, discontent. The march of the iambus is suddenly checked in the fifth foot, and the rapid measure violently tripped up. It is a mischievous metre, and betrays in its malice the Thersitic character of its inventor.

1. The allusion is to ENNIUS, the alter Homerus, who drank of Hippocrene (PROP., 3, 2 [4], 6), and dreamed that he had seen his great original on Parnassus (CIC., Ac. Pr., 2, 16, 51).—fonte: 'in the spring.' The Latin Abl. often has a locative translation, when the conception is not necessarily or not distinctly locative. (G.,* 387.)—prolui: 'drenched' is designedly misused. The figure is Litotes. (G., 448, R. 2.) The greater the depression, the greater the rebound. Non prolui labra = ne primoribus quidem labris attigi.—caballino: Fons caballinus, 'hack's spring,' is a mock translation of Hippocrene = ἵππου κρήνη: the fountain opened by Pegasus with his hoof. Caballus is a comic equivalent of equus. Comp. JUVENAL'S Gorgonei caballi (3, 118).

* G. = Gildersleeve's L. Grammar; A. = Allen and Greenough's; M. = Madvig's.

2. bicipiti: 'two-peaked.' Parnassus is called biceps, either because it appears to have two peaks from such common points of view as the entrance to the Corinthian Gulf (δικόρυμβος ὁ Παρνασσός, LUCIAN, Char., 5), or because of the two tall cliffs (Ov., Met., 1, 316; 2, 221)—the Φαιδριάδες of DIODORUS (16, 28), the δίλοφος πέτρα of SOPHOCLES (Ant., 1126)—between which the Castalian spring takes its rise.—somniasse: sc. me somniasse (G., 527, R. 2; M., 401). With memini the Pres. Inf. is more common of Personal Recollection (G., 277, R; A., 58, 11, b), but the Perfect is also found when the action is distinctly recognized as a by-gone. Comp. saepe velut gemmas eius signumque probarem | per causam memini me tetigisse manum, TIB., 1, 6, 26. Also Ov., Am., 3, 7, 25-6; A. A., 2, 169. The Perfect is especially appropriate here, as the balance of the period would seem to require nec prolui nec (quod meminerim) somniavi; and so Conington with correct instinct translates, 'never that I can remember.'

73

3. sic: οὕτως, 'just so,' 'without any warning, any preparation.'—prodirem: 'make my appearance' (as it were on the stage).

4. Heliconidas: The Muses. Comp. HESIOD (Theog., 1). Hermann prefers the epic form, Heliconiadas.—que—que: G., 478; A., 43, 2, a.—pallidamque Pirenen: Pirene is the fountain of Acrocorinthus, where Pegasus was broken in by Bellerophon. The poetic virtue of its water was a late discovery. Pallidam, attribute for effect. Comp. pallida mors, γλωρὸν δέος, and the like. The pallor of students and poets needs no illustration.

5. remitto: ἀφήμι, for the more usual relinquo, which is a common v.l. Kisselius (Specimen criticum, p. 51) cites CIC., De Orat., 1, 58: tibi remittunt istam voluptatem et ea se carere patiuntur; and TAC., Hist., 4, 11: vim principis complecti, nomen remittere.—imagines: 'busts'

(set up in libraries, public and private). Comp. ut dignus venias hederis et imagine macra, JUV., 7, 29.—lambunt: more frequently used of flames.

6. hederæ: Notice the plural, ‘ivy wreaths,’ G., 195, R. 6. The ivy, being sacred to Bacchus, formed the wreath of victors in scenic contests; thence transferred to poets generally.—sequaces: ‘lissom, pliant.’ PERSIUS seldom, if ever, uses a merely descriptive epithet, and hence some commentators have detected a sneer in these words, ‘lackeying ivy belicks.’—semipaganus: ‘poor half-brother of the guild’ (Conington). The paganus is admitted to all the sacra pagi (paganalia); the semipaganus is a lay-brother. PERSIUS is not a vates, but a semivates. He is not initiated into what ARISTOPHANES calls the γενναίων ὄργια Μουσῶν, Ran., 356. Those who believe that the Satires of PERSIUS were aimed at Nero, see in semipaganus, ‘half-educated,’ as well as in the last seven verses, a deliberate disguise of the poet’s real condition, as a man of culture and of wealth. They overlook the sneer at the class which he is not worthy to join.

7. vatium: with the same tone of derision as in the English equivalent, ‘bards.’—nostrum: perhaps not simply = meum, but ‘native, home-made.’

8. expedit: Expedit and conari both imply difficulty (Jahn), but the difficulty is completely conquered in expedit; not so in conari. The parrot, if not a Greek (ψιττακός), is a Hellenized Hindoo (bitak), and has learned to utter glibly his familiar Bonjour. The magpie is an Italian, and not so deft. Others regard this interpretation, which is essentially Jahn’s, as too subtle, and make verba nostra, which many prefer to nostra verba, simply equivalent to ‘human speech.’—chaere = χαῖρε. Greek was the language of small talk, love talk, parrot-talk.

10. magister artis ingenique largitor: Magister, of that which is taught; largitor, of that which comes from nature’s bounty; -que combines the two into an exhaustive unit (G., 478; A., 43, 3, a). The thought recurs in numberless forms. Comp. ἄ πενία, Διόφαντε, μόνα τὰς τέχνας ἐγείρει, THEOCR., 21, 1; Paupertas omnes artis perdocet, PLAUT., Stich., 1, 3, 23 (Jahn). Add χρεια διδάσκει, κἄν βραδύς τις ἦ, σοφόν, EUR., fr. 709 (Nauck), and ALEXIS, fr. 205 (3, 479 Mein.), where the γαστήρ is expressly mentioned. Birds, it seems, were trained to talk by hunger.

11. negatas: (a natura).—artifex sequi: poetic syntax for a. sequendi. G., 424, R. 4. (comp. 429, R. 4); A., 57, 8, f. 3. A so-called Greek construction. See 1, 59. 70. 118; 5, 15. 24; 6, 6. 24.—sequi = sectari.—voces: (articulate) ‘speech.’

12. quod si: ‘Nay, if but.’ Commentators on HORACE still indulge in remarks on the unpoetical character of quod si, copying Orelli on Od., 1, 1, 35. If quod si is prosaic, PROPERTIUS is to be pitied; he uses it at every turn.—dolosi: ‘seductive, alluring.’ PERSIUS does not deal much in ‘general epithets;’ hence δόλιον κέρδος (PIND., Pyth., 4, 140) is not a sufficient parallel.—refulserit: better every way than refulgeat, which Jahn accepts in his ed. of 1868. The Perf. Subj. is more vivid and more correct than the Present. Re- must not be overlooked. Like the English ‘again,’ it denotes the reversal of a previous condition. Refulgere, ‘to catch the eye by its glitter,’ ‘to flash on the sight’—whereas it lay unnoticed before.—nummi: better translated as a coin. Comp. ‘The Splendid Shilling,’ ‘The Almighty Dollar;’ perhaps ‘The Magic Sixpence.’ Comp. JUV., 7, 8: nam si Pieria quadrans tibi nullus in umbra | ostendatur, etc.

13. corvos poetas et poetridas picas: ‘Raven poets and poetess pies,’ the substantive standing for an epithet, like papa venter, 6, 74. Which of the substantives is adjective to the other does not appear. For the corvus, Poe and Dickens will answer as well as MACROB., Sat. 2, 4. The male poet has a female counterpart in the magpie (pica). According to Ov. (Met., 5, 294, foll.), the daughters of Pierus, the Macedonian, were changed into magpies because they had challenged the Muses to a contest, and reviled the victorious goddesses. There seems to be an allusion to the literary ladies of the day, the blue-stockings of JUVENAL’S Satire (6, 434 foll.). See Friedländer, Sittengeschichte, 1, 481. Poetridas after Gr. analogy.

14. cantare nectar: a poetic extension of the cognate accusative = nectareum carmen cantare (G., 331; A., 52, 1, b). Nectar is copied from PIND., Ol., 7, 7 (νέκταρ χυτόν, Μοισῶν δόσιον), and when combined with Pegaseium is sufficiently grandiloquent to be as absurd as it is intended to be. The old reading, melos (μέλος), with its faulty quantity, rarely finds a champion against nectar.

FIRST SATIRE.

THIS Satire is an attack on the literature of the day as the efflorescence of the corruption of the times. The age is personified by a critical friend, but it is not always easy to determine when the poet is speaking and when the friend, or when the satirist is meeting an imaginary objection from some other imaginary quarter. The unreality of the whole dialogue is confessed with more candor than art in v. 44. Instead of a firm outline, we have a floating quisquis es.

ARGUMENT.—The poem opens with a line, which PERSIUS recites to his man of straw, who forthwith urges him to abandon authorship (1-3). The poet acknowledges that he is at odds with his generation and expects no applause at their hands. But little does he care for their praise; let them prefer a Labeo to him. Their standard is not his standard. He is his own canon. He will not, can not follow the advice of his friend. He must obey the impulse of his temper and speak out (4-12).

Whether we write laborious verse or laborious prose—so the attack begins—it is all one; display and applause are the aim and object of both. The style is fustian; the delivery wanton; the theme prurient. The bard is little better than a bawd (13-23). And yet so deeply rooted is this love of praise that learning is loss, unless it be minted into golden opinions, and knowledge is naught until it be known of men. To be pointed out as a lion, to be used as a school classic—what glory! (24-30). Oh, yes! A glory shared by the dainty ditties, the mewling elegies of lisping, snuffling dandies, for this is what calls forth the approval of the after-dinner circle. Such is the praise that is to bless the poet even after death! (30-40). It is true that fame is not to be despised. No poet but feels his heart vibrate to praise. But the popular acclaim is not the ultimate standard. Mad epics, elegies thrown off in a surfeit, effusions of aristocratic easy-chairs are alike lauded. A man feeds the hungry and clothes the naked, and then asks for a candid opinion. Mockery of criticism! (40-62). The taste of the people relishes nothing but smooth verses—verses without flaw or break, faultless machine-verses—which answer any turn, and serve alike for satire, for eclogues, for heroic strains (63-75). Others, again, call themselves passionate pilgrims to the well of Latin undefiled, and linger over the obsolete magniloquence of PACUVIUS and ACCIUS. A fine olla podrida—this jumble of modern affectation and ancient trumpery (76-82). Bad as this is in literature, how much worse it is to find that the jargon of the salon has become the language of the courts, and that the manly Roman speech is dead. Even in a matter of life and death, the accused thinks more of his rhetorical than of his judicial sentence, and listens for a ‘Pretty good,’ as if that were the verdict (83-91). It will not do to say that great improvements have been made in the art of verse. Smooth are the verses and resonant, but at the cost of sense, of manly vigor. Once catch the trick, and any body can reel off such lines (92-106). Ears are ticklish, our satirist admits. Truth is an unwelcome rasp, and the cold shoulder of great men no toothsome meal. Police regulations are stringent. ‘Commit no nuisance’ is posted every where. Ah, well! It was otherwise in the time of Lucilius. That was a free world in which he crouched Lupus and Mucius. It was otherwise in the time of Horace. That was a gay world, in which he tickled while he taught. And is the poet not to mutter even? King Midas’s barber told his master’s secret to a ditch. Where can a ditch be found? Here in this book (107-121). Few readers can our author hope or desire—only such as have studied closely the great masters of the Attic sock, not such as ignorantly make a mock of Greek attire and Greek science, pride themselves on petty local honors, and rise to no higher conception of wit or fun than a dog-fight or a jibe at personal infirmity (122-134).

It has been well observed that this is the only Satire of PERSIUS in the strict sense of the term; the other five have rather the character of essays on moral themes.

77

One of the best commentaries on this poem is the famous 114th Epistle of SENECA.

The student of English literature will remember that Gifford’s Baviad is an imitation of this piece.

1-7. At the very outset we encounter a difficulty in the distribution of the first lines between P. (Persius) and M. (Monitor, as the second interlocutor is usually called). The arrangement followed in the text may be explained thus:

P. (is discovered absorbed in contemplation. He recites a line from his projected poem).—‘Vanity of vanities!’

M.—Who will read this stuff of yours?

P. (wakes up).—Do you mean that for me? Why, no one, of course.

M.—No one?

P.—Next to no one.

M.—A lame and impotent conclusion!

P.—Why so? Am I to fear that Polydamas and the Trojan dames shall make up their minds to give Labeo the preference over me? Stuff! Don’t assent, when muddled Rome rejects a thing as light weight, and do not trouble yourself to get the faulty tongue of that pair of scales to work right, and look not outside of yourself for what you can find only within yourself.

1. O curas hominum! O quantum est in rebus inane! Homines and res are both used for ‘the world,’ sometimes singly, sometimes together. Res is often to be omitted in translation, or another turn given. O quantum est in rebus inane, ‘Vanity of vanities’—a suitable Stoic text. There seems to be no allusion to LUCRETIUS’S common phrase, in rebus inane.

2. Quis leget haec? a quotation from LUCILIUS, according to the scholiast. Jahn follows Pinzger in supposing that the quotation begins with O curas hominum! See, however, L. Müller, Lucilius, p. 194.

3. vel duo vel nemo: is more guarded, and hence (by Litotes) stronger than nemo. Comp. Gr. ἢ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς.

4. ne mihi praetulerint: an elliptical sentence, such as we often find in final relations (A., 70, 3, f), in English as well as in Latin (G., 688, R.). The sequence is not common in the classic period, but see G., 512, R. Comp. PLAUT., Aul., 2, 3, 11; LIV., 44, 22, and Weissenborn in loc. The Greek would be: μὴ προτιμήσωσι.—Polydamas: Some write Pulydamas, corresponding with the Homeric form, Πουλυδάμας; but Pōlydamas (Πωλυδάμας) is the Sicilian Doric, like pōlypus (πωλύπος). The allusion is to a familiar passage in HOM., Il., 22, 100. 104. 5: Πουλυδάμας μοι πρῶτος ἐλεγχείην ἀναθήσει—νῦν δ’ ἐπεὶ ὄλεσα λαὸν ἀτασθαλίῃσιν ἐμῆσιν | αἰδέομαι Τρῶας καὶ Τρῳάδας ἐλκεσιπέπλους. These are the words of Hector, as he steels his great heart to meet Achilles. Polydamas is the counsellor who had urged him (18, 254) to withdraw the Trojans into Troy, and Hector is ashamed to turn back and encounter the rebuke of Polydamas and the reproaches of his people. PERSIUS uses Polydamas as the type of the Roman critic, and by a familiar satiric stroke leaves out the Trojan men, as if they were no men in Rome. Others understand ‘Nero and his effeminate court.’ The Homeric passage had been well worn by ARISTOTLE and CICERO (Att., 2, 5, 1; 7, 1, 4; 8, 16, 2) before it came to PERSIUS. There is perhaps a side-thrust at the pride of the old Roman families in their Trojan descent. Comp. JUV., 1, 100:

78

iubet a praecone vocari | ipsos Troiugenae; also 8, 181. See Friedländer, Sittenges., 1, 230.

—Labeonem: the ATTIIUS (LABEO) of v. 50, an unfortunate translator of Homer, who stuck close to the letter. The scholiast has preserved a line. Ὠμὸν βεβρώθοις Πριάμον Πριάμοιό τε παῖδας (Il., 4, 35) is rendered thus: crudum manduces Priamum Priamique pisinnos. ‘Raw you’d munch both Priam himself and Priam’s papooses.’

5. nugae: The accusative is more common. Comp. G., 340, R. 1.—non accedas—nec quaesiveris: Non and nec, where QUINTILIAN’S rigid rule (1, 5, 50) requires ne and neve. G., 266, R. 1; A., 41, 2, e. Comp. 3, 73 and 5, 45.—turbida: ‘muddle-headed’ (Conington). But comp. Alexandrea turbida, AUSON., Clar. Urb., 3, 4.

6, 7. elevet: ‘reject as light.’ The figure is taken from weighing, doubtless a common trope in the schools.—examen: (filum, ligula) is the ‘index, tongue, or needle’ which is said to be inprobum, ‘faulty,’ ‘wilful,’ ‘untoward,’ because it does not move freely or accurately on its pivot.—trutina: (Gr. τρυτάνη, a word of doubtful etymology and loose application, means here ‘a balance,’ ‘a pair of scales,’ not, as the scholiast says, the foramen, ‘fork’ or ‘cheeks,’ in which the examen plays.—castiges = percutias (Schol.) of the tap given to a hitching balance. Gesner, s.v., regards castigare here as equivalent to conpescere (5, 100), a view which has a good deal in its favor. The notion is not ‘do not correct the popular standard,’ but ‘do not try to get an exact result by the popular standard (for your guidance).’ Hermann (Lect. Pers., II., 9) follows those who understand the examen and trutina of different instruments: Noli examen tuum in populi trutina castigare.* So Pretor, who translates: ‘Do not try to correct the erring tongue of your delicate balance by applying to it a pair of ordinary scales.’—nec te quaesiveris extra: (te) ‘Nor look for yourself (what you can find only in yourself) outside of yourself.’ ‘Be your own norm.’ Others arrange: nec quaesiveris extra te, ‘Nor ask any opinion but your own.’

* No satisfactory treatment of this subject is accessible to me. The Greek and Latin dictionaries are wildly at variance with one another and with the authorities. Examen seems to have been originally the strap by which the beam was suspended—not from AG, but from AP. See ISIDOR., Orig., 16, 23, and comp. amentum (ammentum). Add LUCIL., 16, 14 (L. Müller). EUSTATHIUS’S τρυτάνη ἐπὶ ζογοῦ ἢ τειρομένη τῷ βάρει τῶν ὄγκων points to the pivot (knife-edge) as the first meaning of trutina.

8-12. The distribution followed is that of Jahn (1843), which gives nolo (v. 11) to the interlocutor. The jerky, self-interrupting discourse is supposed to be characteristic of the petulante splene cachinno. ‘What is the use of consulting Rome? Every body there is an— If I might say what! If I might? Surely I may, when I consider how old we are become, how grum we are, and all the step-fatherly manner of our lives, since the days of “commonneys” and “alley tors.” Indulge me. It can not be. What am I to do? Nothing? But I am a man of laughter with a saucy spleen.’

8. nam Romae quis non? The suppressed predicate is to be supplied from the general scope of the passage. The sentence is not completed in v. 131 (auriculas asini habet), for the simple reason that PERSIUS did not write quis non in that passage, but Mida rex.

9. cum—aspexi: Cum is equivalent to postquam here. G., 567; A., 62, 3, e.—canitiem: ‘premature old age,’ ‘loss of youthful freshness.’ All through this satire the poet lashes old age, as commentators have observed. So here, and 22. 26. 56. 79. The ‘hoary head’ is not a ‘crown of glory,’ but a sign of debauchery; the ‘fair, round belly,’ which is not uncomely in the elderly justice, is nothing but a swagging paunch; the bald pate is not a mirror of honor, but a mirror of dishonor; in short, ‘no fool like an old fool.’ Especially severe is PERSIUS on the ‘used-up’ man; and the affected moralizing of young men, who had outlived their youth before they had had time to forget the games of boyhood, drove him to satire. On the Neronian hypothesis, PERSIUS is endeavoring to masquerade as an old man.—nostrum istud vivere triste: ‘sour way of life.’ This is a so-called figura Graeca, which out-Greeks the Greeks. Good authors are very cautious in adding an attribute to the infinitive, and do not go beyond ipsum, hoc ipsum. Scire tuum, v. 27; ridere meum, v. 122; velle suum, 5, 53; sapere nostrum, 6, 38, can not be rendered literally into the language from which they are supposed to be imitated. Nursery infinitives (3, 17) belong to a different category.

10. nucibus: The modern equivalent is ‘marbles.’ The very games survive. (See 3, 50.) It is hardly necessary to prove that putting away such childish things means becoming a man. Da nuces pueris, iners | concubine: satis diu | Iusisti nucibus, CATULL., 61, 127-9.

11. patruos: On the accusative, see G., 329, R. 1; A., 52, 1, c. The patruorum rigor was proverbial. Owing to the legal position of the paternal uncle, who was often the guardian, it is the patruus, not the avunculus, who is the type of severity. So the cruel uncle of the ballad of the ‘children in the wood’ is the father’s brother.

12. quid faciam? G., 258; A., 57, 6.—sed: (I know you want me to do nothing), ‘but’ (I can’t keep quiet) ‘I am a laugher born.’—petulante: literally, ‘given to butting,’ hence ‘saucy’—splene: The seat of laughter.—cachinno: a substantive, perhaps built by PERSIUS on the analogy of bibo, epulo, erro, etc. Comp. glutto, 5, 112; palpo, 5, 176. Hermann, following Heindorf, makes cachinno a verb, and reads: tunc, tunc—ignoscite, nolo; quid faciam sed sum petulante splene—cachinno, ‘Then—then—excuse me—I would rather not—what am I to do?—I can’t help it—my spleen is too much for me—I must have my laugh.’ Jahn (1868) accepts tunc, tunc—ignoscite, nolo, but goes no further.

13-23. The battery opens. Verse-wright and writer of prose alike care for nothing except applause. Follows a vivid picture of a popular recitation.

13. Scribimus inclusi: Comp. scribimus indocti, etc. HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 117.—inclusi: ‘in closet pent’ (Gifford’s Baviad), to show the artificial and labored character of the composition in contrast with the beggarly result. Markland’s ingenious conjecture, inclusus numeris, is not necessary. Heinr. admires Markl., but retains numeros as a Greek accusative!—numeros: ‘poetry;’ pede liber = pede libero, ‘foot-loose,’ ‘prose,’ soluta oratio.

14. grande: ‘vast,’ ‘grandiose.’ Grandis is always used with intention, which our word ‘grand’ sometimes fails to give. See 1, 68; 2, 42; 3, 45. 55; 5, 7. 186; 6, 22.—quod pulmo: ‘something vast enough to make a lung generous of breath pant in the utterance of it.’ Jahn (1868) reads quo for quod; quo is not so vigorous.—animae praelargus: a stretch of the adjectives of fulness (G., 373, R. 6; A., 50, 3, b); praelargus = capacissimus.

15. scilicet: Ironical sympathy, ‘O yes!’—haec: The position is emphatic.—populo: ‘to the public,’ ‘in public.’ The political force of populus has ceased.—pexus: ‘with hair and beard well dress’d.’ ‘Combed’ hardly conveys the notion: say ‘shampooed.’—togaque recenti: ‘fresh’ (from the fuller).

16. natalicia sardonyche: Jewelry reserved for great occasions. The brilliancy of the sardonyx is a common theme. Rufe vides ilium subsellia prima tenentem | cuius et hinc lucet sardonychata manus, MART., 2, 29, 1-2—tandem: shows impatience.—albus = albatus (comp. 2, 40; HOR., Sat., 2, 2, 61) on account of the toga recens. So niveos ad frenas Quirites, JUV., 10, 45. Heinr. argues at length in favor of ‘pale.’

17. sede celsa = ex cathedra.—leges: So Jahn (1868), despite the MSS. Legens may be explained at a pinch as lecturus, a comma being put after ocello; Hermann combines with pulmo, and comp. JUV., 10, 238 sq., where os stands for the owner of the same. Add cana gula, JUV., 14, 10. But pexus and albus make such a synecdoche incredible.—liquidus: quia liquidam vocem efficit. Comp. HOR., Od., 1, 24, 3: cui liquidam pater | vocem cum cithara dedit. The attribute is put for the effect, as in pallidam Pirenen, Prol., 4.—plasmate: according to QUINT., 1, 8, 2, a technical name for the professional training of the voice, a kind of rhetorical solfeggio. Others understand the plasma of a gargle to clear the throat.

18. mobile collueris: Mobile is predicative. Translate: ‘after gargling your throat to suppleness by filtering modulation.’—patranti ocello: ‘an eye that would be doing,’ ‘a leering, lustful eye.’ QUINT. (8, 3, 44) says of patrare: mala consuetudine in obscenum intellectum sermo detortus. Comp. ‘do’ in SHAKSP., Troil. and Cressida, 4, 2: Go hang yourself, you naughty, mocking uncle! You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.—fractus = effeminatus, ‘debauched,’ ‘languishing,’ κλαδάρως. Conington translates: ‘with a languishing roll of your wanton eye.’

19. neque more probo nec voce serena: Litotes. see Prol., 1.

20. ingentis Titos: Comp. celsi Rhamnes, HOR., A. P., 342. Here, however, there is a reference to size of body (like ingens Pulfennius, 5, 190; torosa iuventus, 3, 86; caloni alto, 5, 95), for which PERSIUS seems to have had a Stoic contempt. Titi, perhaps another form of Tities, the old Sabine nobility (Mommsen, Rom. Gesch., B. 1, K. 4), of whom much aristocratic virtue might have been expected (sanctos licet horrida mores | tradiderit domus ac veteres imitata Sabinos, JUV., 10, 298-9). Instead of that we have great, hulking debauchees.—trepidare: ‘quiver.’ The word is used indifferently of pleasant and unpleasant agitation. The quavering measure thrills them so that they can not sit still. On the infinitive, see 3, 64.

21. scalpuntur intima: ‘their marrow is tickled.’ Scalpere is opposed to radere, 1, 107. Comp. 3, 114; 5, 15.

22. tun: -ne is often found in rhetorical questions.—vetule: ‘you old reprobate,’ ‘you old sinner.’—escas: ‘tidbits;’ ‘escas colligere,’ ‘cater.’

23. quibus et dicas: Et belongs to cute perditus, which is variously explained ‘dropsical,’ ‘unblushing,’ ‘thoroughly diseased.’ The context requires a tough subject, and ‘hide-bound’ or ‘case-hardened’ might answer as a rendering.—ohe: a reminiscence of HOR., Sat. 2, 5, 96: importunus amat laudari; donec ‘O he iam’ | ad caelum manibus sublatis dixerit, urge, | crescentem tumidis infla sermonibus utrem, which last line helps us to understand cute perditus. PERSIUS, as is his wont, tries to improve on HORACE, and makes his man inelastic.

24-43. M. Study is useless except to show what a man has in him.—P. A low ideal for a student.—M. Fame is a fine thing.—P. It would be a fine thing if it were not shared by every dinner-table poet.—M. You are too captious. It is a great thing to have written poems that are proof against trunk-maker and pastry-cook.

24. Quo didicisse? The exclamatory infinitive with involved subject. G., 534 (340); A., 57, 8, g.

25. iecore: the seat of the passions. Here ‘heart’ or ‘breast’ would seem to be more appropriate.—caprificus: the wild fig-tree sprouts in the clefts of rocks and cracks of buildings, which it rends in its growth. Ad quae | discutienda valent mala robora fici, JUV., 10, 145.

26. En pallor seniumque: ‘So that’s the meaning of your studious pallor (v. 124; 3, 85; 5, 62) and your (early) old age.’ With senium comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 18, 47: inhumanae senium depone Camenae. PERSIUS mocks at the weariness to the flesh which the student has undergone for so paltry a result. This is the arrangement of Jahn (1843) and Hermann. Jahn (1868) follows Heinr. in giving the line to the remonstrant. En, originally an interrogative, is, after the time of SALLUST, confounded with em, and combined with the nom. in the sense of em, which properly takes the accus. alone. So Ribbeck, Beiträge zur Lehre von den latein. Partikeln, S. 35.—o mores: CICERO’S famous ejaculation.—usque adeone: Usque adeone mori miserum est, VERG., Aen., 12, 646; usque adeo nihil est, JUV., 3, 84.

27. scire tuum nihil est, etc.: ‘And is thy knowledge nothing if not known’ (Gifford). These jingles were much admired in antiquity. The passage from LUCILIUS, which PERSIUS is said to have imitated, reads, according to L. Müller (fr. inc., 40, 73): ne dampnum faciam, scire hoc sibi nesciat is me. A better example in LUCR., 4, 470.

28. At: objects. See G., 490; A., 43, 3, b.—digito monstrari: δακτύλῳ δείκνυσθαι (δακτυλοδεικτεῖσθαι). Quod monstror digito praetereuntium, HOR., Od., 4, 3, 22; saepe aliquis digito vatem designat euntem, Ov., Am., 3, 1. 19.—hic est: οὗτος ἐκεῖνος, in the well-known story of Demosthenes. CIC., Tusc. Dis., 5, 36.—dicier: On the form, see G., 191, 2; A., 30, 6, e, 4. So fallier, 3, 50.

29. cirratorum: ‘curl-pates.’ Jahn cites MART., 9, 29, 7: Matutini cirrata caterva magistri. School-boys wore their hair long, but PERSIUS does not waste his epithets, and ‘youths of quality’ are doubtless meant. Comp. the lautorum pueros of JUV., 7, 177.—dictata: ‘Persius takes not only higher schools, but higher lessons, dictata being passages from the poets read out by the master (for want of books) and repeated by the boys’ (Conington). Translate ‘a lesson-book,’ a ‘school classic.’

30. Ecce: introduces a satiric sketch of ‘classic poets at work.’—inter pocula: ‘over their cups.’ Poems were read at table by an ἀναγνώστης, as lives of the saints are still read in religious houses.

31. Romulidae: Comp. Titos, v. 20; trossulus, v. 82; Romule, v. 87.—dia: θεῖα, an affected word. ‘Let us hear,’ say the company, ‘what his charming verses are about’ (Pretor). Conington renders: ‘What news from the divine world of poesy?’

32. hyacinthia laena: The dandies of the day wore upper garments of military cut and gay colors. A similar military dandyism on the part of non-military men is observable in the Macedonian period. Comp. χλαμυδηφόροι ἄνδρες, THEOCR., 15, 6, with the commentators.

33. rancidulum quiddam: ‘affected stuff,’ ‘namby-pamby trash.’—balba de nare = de nare balbutiens, ‘with a nasal lisp,’ ‘with a snuffle and a lisp’ (Conington). Balbus is especially used of the introduction of an aspirate, and ‘lisp,’ which involves a spirant, is only approximate. Comp. θαῦμα μέγα, inquit balba, LUCIL., 6, 20, with L. Müller’s note.—locutus: Perf. Part. where we should expect a Present. G., 278, R.

34. Phyllidas Hypsipylas: Phyllis, fearing that she had been deserted by her lover, Demophon, hanged herself, and was changed into an almond-tree (Ov., Her., 2). Hypsipyle of Lemnos, after bearing two children to Jason, was forsaken by him (Ov., Her., 6). These doleful themes (plorabilia) were popular in PERSIUS’S time. The plural is contemptuous in Latin as in English.

35. eliquat: ‘filters.’ Every rough particle is strained out so as to make the voice ‘liquid.’ The passage from APUL., Flor., p. 351, Elm., cited by Jahn, canticum videtur ore tereti semihiantibus in conatu labellis eliquare, indicates a cooing position of the lips, in which the mouth simulates a colander.—supplantat: ὑποσκελίζει (LUCIL., 29, 50, L. M.), ‘trips up.’ To judge by HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 274, balba feris annoso verba palato, of which the language of PERSIUS seems to be an exaggeration, the sounds impinge upon the roof of the mouth instead of coming out boldly—a kind of lolling utterance.—tenero: adds another shade: the tripping is light, for the roof is sensitive; ‘minces his words as though his mouth were sore’ (Pretor).

36. adsensere viri: Observe the Epic vein. Adsensere omnes, VERG., Aen., 2, 130; adsensere dii, Ov., Met., 9, 259 (Jahn). Viri, ‘heroes.’—non-?—non-? On the form of the question, see G., 455; A., 71, 1, R.

37. levior cippus: Sufficiently familiar is the old wish, SIT · TIBI · TERRA · LEVIS, which, like the modern R·I·P·, was promoted to the dignity of initials (S·T·T·L·).—ossa: Patrono meo ossa bene quiescant, PETRON., 39.

38. manibus = cineribus, ‘remains’ (Conington). On this ‘materialism,’ see Tylor, Primitive Culture, 2, 24 foll.

40. nascentur violae: ‘Lay her i’ the earth | and from her fair and unpolluted flesh | may violets spring.’ SHAKSP., Hamlet, 5, 1.—‘Rides’ ait: As in HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 43. Ait is used like inquit (G., 199, R. 3), without any definite reference.—nimis uncis | naribus indulges: ‘you are too much given to hooking, curling your nose.’ Naribus uti, HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 45; naso adunco, HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 5.

41. an: when used alone is more or less rhetorical, and is intended to force a conclusion involved in the foregoing; ‘What?’ ‘So then?’ G., 459; A., 71, 2, b. PERSIUS’S use of it is instructive: v. 87; 2, 19. 26; 3, 19. 27. 61; 5, 83. 125. 163. 164; 6, 51. 63.—velle meruisse: See G., 275, 2; A., 53, 11, d, for the tense of meruisse. The Perf. after velle is legal rather than Greek. Comp. v. 91, qui me volet incurvasse querela. So HOR. (Sat. 2, 3, 187), mimicking the legal tone: ne quis humasse velit Aiace, Atrida, vetas? cur? Other Perf. Infinitives with varying motives are found: 1, 132; 2, 66; 4, 7. 17; 5, 24. 33; 6, 4. 6. 17. 77.

42. os populi: ‘popular applause,’ ‘a place in the mouths of men’ (Conington). Comp. the phrase in ore esse.—cedro digna: Cedar oil was used to preserve manuscripts. Speramus carmina fingi posse linenda cedro, HOR., A. P., 331-2.

43. nec scombros nec tus: The fear of the mackerel is a stroke of CATULLUS, 95, 8, which Milton imitates, Ep., 10: gaudete scombri. Comp. MART., 4, 86, 8. For tus, comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 269: deferar in vicum vendentem tus et odores | et piper et quicquid chartis amicitur ineptis. The modern equivalent is the grocer or the pastry-cook.

44-62. The poet gives up his dramatizing and speaks in his own person. 'I am not indifferent to fame, but I reject a standard which approves such stuff as Labeo's, such ditties as "persons of quality" dictate after dinner, a standard which makes a hot dish the test of poetic fervor, and covers a multitude of poetic sins with a cast-off cloak. If you had eyes in the back of your head, you would see that all this praise is for value received.'

44. dicere feci: G., 527, R. 1; A., 70, 2.

45. non ego: 'I do not decline your praise—no, not I.' G., 447; A., 76, 3, d. Comp. 2, 3; 3, 78; and HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 37, non ego ventosae plebis suffragia venor.—si forte quid aptius exit: 'if I chance to turn out (off) a rather neat piece of work.' Exit may mean 'to leave the shop' (ex officina exire, CIC., Parad., pr. 5), or 'to leave the potter's wheel,' as urceus exit, HOR., A. P., 22 (Jahn). Conington translates 'hatch' on account of rara avis. Κακὸν ῥόν. The passage is imitated by QUINT., 12, 10, 26.

46. quando: gives the reason for his saying si forte. There is no necessity of writing quanquam, but the translation 'although' is not unnatural, as causative particles are often adversative. Comp. cum and Gr. ἐπεὶ.—rara avis: proverbial as in the famous line of JUV., 6, 165.

47. laudari metuum: So HOR., metuens audiri, Ep., 1, 16, 60; metuit tangi, Od., 3, 11, 10. In prose the construction is less common with metuo than with vereor. G., 552, R. 1; M., 376, Obs. —cornea: 'of horn.' The metaphorical use seems to be novel. Comp. HOM., Od., 19, 211: ὀφθαλμοὶ δ' ὡς εἰ κέρρα ἔστασαν ἢ ἐσίδηρος.—fibra: 'heart.' See 5, 29.

48. recti finemque extremumque: 'the ultimate standard.' Conington renders 'be-all and end-all.'

49. euge, belle: like decenter (v. 84), are current expressions of approbation at public readings. Euge, 'bravo!' belle, 'well said!' decenter, 'pretty fair!' MARTIAL gives us a list of popular comments (2, 27, 3-4): Effecte! graviter! st! nequiter! euge! beate! | hoc volui!—excute: a favorite word with PERSIUS as with SENECA, Ep., 13, 8; 16, 7; 22, 10; 26, 3; De Ira, 3, 36 (Jahn). The metaphor is taken from shaking clothes in order to get out any thing that may be concealed in them—Gr., ἐκσεῖεν. We should say 'analyze.'

50. quid non intus habet: The figure is kept up. 'What is not covered up in that beggarly rag of a belle'?—non = nonne. G., 445 and R.; A., 71, 1.—Atti: See v. 4.—Ilias ebria: Comp. ebrius sermo, SEN., Ep., 19, 9.

51. veratro: white hellebore (album multum terribilius nigro, PLIN., II. N., 25, 5, 21), a strong emetic, which students took 'to quicken their wits.' The modern veratrum is a different drug. —elegidia: contemptuous, 'bits of elegies' on such themes as Phyllis and Hypsipyle. E. a Greek word not in Greek lexicons, like poetridas, Prol., 13.—crudi: with their dinners undigested and their brains muddled.

52. dictarunt: 'extemporize.'—lectis: 'sofas.' The ancients wrote in a recumbent posture far more frequently than we do.

53. citreis: 'of citron wood,' 'wood of the thyia' (Thyia articulata, African Arbor Vitae, PLIN., 15, 29). The fabulous cost of tables of this material is well known. CIC., Verr., 4, 17, 37.—scis: 'you know how.' Scire in this sense is related to posse, as Fr. savoir to pouvoir, a traditional distinction.—calidum: 'hot-and-hot' (Pretor).—ponere: 1. 'serve up;' 2. 'cause to serve up,' 'treat to.' Heri non tam bonum posui et multo honestiores cenabant, PETRON., 34.—sumen: a dainty dish in the eyes of Greek and Roman. Comp. vulva nil pulchrius ampla, HOR., Ep., 1, 15, 41; PLUT., Sanit. Praec., 124F; ALCIPH., Ep., 1, 20; and the joke in ALEXIS, fr. 188 (3, 473 Mein.).

54. comitem horridulum trita donare lacerna: This is the kind of patronage that galled LUCIAN (De Merced. Cond., 37), who mentions the paltry present of an ἐφειστρίδιον ἄθλιον ἢ χιτώδιον ὑπόσαθρον. On the word comitem, see 3, 7. Horridulum comitem, 'shivering beggar of a companion,' 'poor devil in your suite.' For the custom, comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 37: Non ego ventosae plebis suffragia venor | impensis cenarum et tritae munere vestis.

56. qui pote? Pote is an archaism for potis. Both potis and pote are used as predicates without regard to number and gender.—vis dicam: G., 546, R. 3; A., 70, 3, f. R. Vis does not wait for an answer. See 6, 63.—nugaris: 'you are a twaddler' (Conington).—calve: PERSIUS calls up his vetulus (v. 22) again, and gives him a huge 'bombard' of a belly. Nero had a venter proiectus, and some editors fancy that Nero's person is aimed at here, and Nero's poetry in the verses that follow. See Introd., xxxvi.

57. aqualiculus: (said properly to mean 'a pig's stomach') 'paunch,' 'cloak-bag of guts,' SHAKSP. —protensio sesquiped: Comp. the Greek proverb: παχεῖα γαστήρ λεπτὸν οὐ τίκτει νόον. Even M. Martha is forced to say: Le trait n'est ni spirituel ni poli (Moralistes Romains, p. 147). For the justification, see v. 128. Jahn (1843) reads propenso.

58. iane: Janus, who sees both ways, is secure from being laughed at behind his back.—ciconia pinsit = pinsendo ludit. The fingers of the mocker imitate the clapping of the stork's bill. Pinsit, 'pounds,' because the ciconia levat ac deprimit rostrum dum clangit, ISIDOR., Orig., 20, 15, 3. 'Pecks at' is not correct; 'claps' is nearer. What seems to be meant is mock applause.

59. auriculas: The imitation of ass's ears by the hands belongs to universal culture.—imitari mobilis = ad imitandum m. G., 424, R. 4; A., 57, 8, f.—albas: on account of the white lining. OV., Met., 11, 176: aurēs—villis albensibus implet.

60. linguae: The thrusting out of the tongue in derision is as common now as it was then.—canis Apula: Apulia was the δῖψιτον Ἄργος of Italy. Siticulosae Apuliae, HOR., Epod., 3, 16.—tantae: So Jahn and Herm. 'Tongues big enough to represent the thirst of an Apulian hound' (Pretor). Jahn compares for the construction, LUC., 1, 259: quantum rura silent, tanta quies. Conington considers tantum 'much neater,' and makes quantum sitiati = quantum sitiens protendat, 'a length of tongue protruded like an Apulian dog in the dog-days.'

61. vos, o patricius sanguis: HOR., A. P., 291: vos, o | Pompilius sanguis. The Nom. for the Vocative in solemn address. G., 194, R. 3; A., 53, a.—fas est = fatum est, 'it is ordained.'

62. occipiti: Notice the exceptional Abl. in i. Comp. AUSON., Epigr., 12, 8: occipiti calvo es, and capiti, v. 83.—posticae: chiefly of the back part of a building: 'back-stairs' (Conington).—occurrite: 'turn round and face' (Conington and Pretor).—sannae: 'flout,' 'gibe,' 'flee,' μῶκος.

63-82. PERSIUS takes up the thread which Janus had rudely snapt: 'We have heard the bounden praise of dependants. What does the town say? Why, they admire the smooth flow of the verse, the grand style. If they find these requisites, little do they care about theme or order of development; the 'prentice hand that bungles an eclogue, undertakes an epic—nay, jumbles eclogue and epic—Bravo, poet! all the same. Another mania is the passion for the old poets, a Pacuvian revival. What is to be expected when all this bubble-and-squeak language is the daily food of our children and the dear delight of lecture-halls?'

63. Quis = qui. G., 105; A., 21, 1, a.—quis enim: Enim, like γὰρ; 'why, what else?' 'of course.' G., 500; A., 43, 3, d.

64. nunc demum: as if something marvellous had been accomplished.—severos: 'captious, critical.'

65. effundat: 'suffers to glide smoothly,' a harsh expression.—iunctura: The image is that of the joining of pieces of marble, as in an opus tessellatum. Comp. LUCIL., fr. inc., 10, 33 (L. M.): quam lepide λέξεις conpostae, ut tesserulae, omnes | arte pavimenti atque emblematis vermiculati. The poet is compared with an artisan, not with an artist. He knows how to fit the pieces together so perfectly as to present a continuous smooth surface to the pressure of the most exacting nail. Comp. v. 92.—tendere versum: 'to lay off a verse,' as a carpenter lays off his work. The propriety of the word tendere is heightened, if we remember that the hexameter was called the versus longus.

66. Carpenter-like, the versewriter stretches his ruddled line (rubrica), sights it (oculo derigit uno), and springs it. The modern carpenter uses chalk instead of ruddle, but the red pencil may be regarded as a survival of color. For references, see Rost's Passow, s.v. στάθμη. For the spelling derigat, remember that dirigere is 'to point in different directions;' derigere 'in one.'—ac si derigat: On the sequence, see G., 604; A., 61, 1, R.

67. sive: seldom used alone; here for vel si.—in mores, in luxum, in prandia regum: a kind of anticlimax. In does not necessarily, though it does naturally, denote hostility. The prandium was originally a very simple meal. The Stoic model is set up in SENECA, Ep. 83, 6: Panis deinde siccus et sine mensa prandium, post quod non sunt lavandae manus. The manger sur le pouce became in time the déjeuner à la fourchette (calidum prandium, PLAUT., Poen., 3, 5, 14), and then the déjeuner dinatoire (prandia cenis ingesta, SEN., N. Q., 4, 13, 6). Regum, 'grandees,' 'nobobs,' belongs to prandia alone.

68. res grandis: 'sublimities.'

69. heroas: used as an adjective.—sensus: 'sentiments.'—adferre: 'parade,' 'bring on parade.' On the Inf., see 3, 64.

70. nugari graece: 'dabble in Greek verses,' a phase of fashionable education, no more peculiar to NERO than to HORACE (Sat. 1, 10, 31).—ponere lucum: 'put before our eyes,' 'paint,' 'describe.' Lucus, a favorite poetic theme. Jahn thinks of the grove in which Mars and Rhea Silvia met, JUV., 1, 7. Perhaps young poets tried their skill on groves, as young draughtsmen on trees.

71. artifices: With artifices ponere comp. artifex sequi, Prol., 11.—rus saturum: 'lush, teeming country.'—corbes—focus—porci: all 'properties' of country life.

72. fumosa Palilia faeno: The festival called Palilia, in honor of Pales (from the same radical as pa-sco), was celebrated on the anniversary of the founding of Rome, April 21st. It was a day reeking (fumosa) with bonfires of hay (faenum), over which the peasants leaped, doubtless 'to appease the evil spirit by a pretended sacrifice' (Pretor). The dictionaries will furnish the loci classici. The other form, Parilia, is due to 'dissimilation.' Comp. meridies for medidies.

73. unde: 'the source of;' loosely used to show connection.—Remus: not unfrequently takes the place of his longer brother, whose oblique cases do not fit well into dactylic verse. So turba Remi, JUV., 10, 73; reddat signa Remi, PROP., 4, 6, 80; and the other examples in Freund.—sulco: 'with' and 'in the furrow.' See Prol., v., 1.—terens: 'wearing bright' (Conington), 'furbishing.' König compares: sulco attritus splendescere vomer, VERG., Georg., 1, 46.—dentalia: 'share-beams,' VERG., Georg., 1, 171, with Conington's note.—Quinti: Cincinnatus, LIV., 3, 26.

74. cum dictatorem induit: So Jahn (1843). Decidedly the easiest reading, but the best in connection with terens. In his ed. of 1868, Jahn reads quem dictatorem. Hermann objects to the expression, and insists on dictaturam, appealing in his preface to PLIN., H. N., 18, 3, 20, for dictaturam in the sense of vestem dictatoriam. Surely, to 'robe dictator' and to 'robe with the dictatorship' are not far apart, and the former is the more striking expression.—trepida: 'flurried.' See v. 20.—ante boves: is supposed to give local coloring, and to bring before us the 'slow, bovine gaze' of the astonished cattle.

75. tua aratra: Poetic plural.—euge poeta: Here the applause comes in. Mr. Pretor considers the words from corbes to tulit ‘a quotation, perhaps from one of Nero’s poems.’

76. est nunc: PERSIUS attacks the antiquarii in imitation of Horace. The older Latin poets have long been restored to their rights. ACCIUS and PACUVIUS hardly need defenders. Hermann makes the sentence interrogative.—Brisaei: ‘Bacchic.’ Brisaeus was an epithet of Bacchus, transferred to the poet of Bacchus, who was perhaps too devoted a worshipper of the god. There was a famous saying of CRATINUS, who was in like manner called ταυροφραγος, a surname of Bacchus: ὕδωρ δὲ πίνων οὐδὲν ἄν τέκοι σοφόν, fr. 186 (2, 119 Mein.). Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 1.—venosus: For the figure, comp. TAC., Dial. 21. The ‘standing out of the veins’ refers not so much to the ‘shrinking of the flesh in old age’ (Conington), as to the scrawniness of the person. So TACIT. uses durus et siccus of ASINIUS POLLIO (l.c.), Gr. ἰσχνός. ‘Angular,’ ‘hard-lined,’ is about what is meant. Others prefer ‘thick-veined,’ ‘turgid.’—liber: of a play, QUINT., 1, 10, 18; PROP., 4 (3), 21, 28 (Jahn).—Acci: also written Atti (584-650? A.U.C.). CICERO calls him gravis et ingeniosus poeta, summus poeta (pr. Planc., 24, 59; Sest., 56, 120); HOR., altus (Ep., 2, 1, 56); OV., animosi oris (Am., 1, 15, 19). PACUVIUS said that the compositions of ACCIUS were sonora quidem et grandia sed duriora paulum et acerbiora.

92

77. Pacuvius: nephew of Ennius (534-622 A.U.C.). His great model was SOPHOCLES.—verrucosa: ‘warty,’ intended to be a climax of ugliness.—moretur: ‘fascinates,’ ‘enthalls.’ Fabula—valdius oblectat populum meliusque moratur, HOR., A. P., 321.

78. Antiopa: imitated from a lost play of EURIPIDES. The fragments have been collected by Ribbeck, Tr. Lat. Reliq., p. 62; comp. p. 278. Antiope, as the mother of Amphion and Zethus, and the victim of Dirce, is famous in literature and in art (the Toro Farnese).—aerumnis cor luctificabile fulta: ‘who props her dolorific heart on teen’ (Gifford). Jahn defends the conception as truly poetical, apart from the obsolete language. ‘The only stay of her sad heart is sorrow.’ The words are doubtless taken from the play itself, of course in different order. Aerumna was out of date as early as the time of QUINTILIAN (8, 3, 26), who protests against the use of it. As to luctificabile, if we go by the fragments, it is ACCIUS, rather than PACUVIUS, that indulges in such formations as horrificabilis, aspernabilis, tabificabilis, execrabilis, evocabilis.

79. lippos: of the eyes of the mind. Comp. 2, 72.

80. sartago: literally ‘a frying-pan,’ ‘hubble-bubble’ (Conington), ‘gallimaufry,’ ‘galimatias,’ ‘olio’ (Gifford), ‘olla podrida.’

81. dedecus: The language is disgraced and degraded by this mixture of old and new. PERSIUS would not have enjoyed Tennyson’s resuscitations. See Introd., xxiv.—in quo: ‘at which.’

82. trossulus: an old name of the Roman knights, of disputed origin. It was afterward used in derision. Jahn compares the German Junker.—exultat: ἀναπηδᾷ, ‘jumps up in delight.’—per subsellia: Jahn understands the ‘benches’ or ‘forms’ in court; others, perhaps more correctly, the seats in the lecture-hall. There is a climax. First, private teaching; next, public lectures; thirdly, practical life, to which we come in the following verse.—levis: the position is emphatic, ‘the smug, womanish creature.’ Levis is levigatus. Ancient literature is full of allusions to this effeminate παρατιλισς.

93

83. nilne: stronger than nonne, ‘not a blush of shame.’—capiti: rarer Ablative in i. Neue gives examples (Formenlehre, 1, 242). The simple Abl. is found with pellere, even in prose, and the Dative, which some prefer, would be forced.—cano: See note on v. 9.

84. quin optes: G., 551; A., 65, 1, b.—tepidum: ‘lukewarm,’ decenter being faint praise. ‘In good taste’ (Conington). Gr. πρεπόντως.

85. ‘Fur es:’ The accuser puts his point plainly enough; in three letters, as the Romans would say.—ait: Comp. v. 40.—Pedio: Jahn thinks it likely that this Pedius is not HORACE’S man (Sat., 1, 10, 28), but one Pedius Blaesus, condemned under Nero, TAC., Ann., 14, 18; Hist., 1, 77. PERSIUS knew more about HORACE than about the causes célèbres of his own day.—rasis antithetis: commonly rendered ‘polished antitheses.’ With radere comp. the Gr. διεσμιλευμένοι φροντίδες, ALEXIS, fr. 215 (3, 483 Mein.). But the figure may possibly be taken from the careful removal of overweight in either scale of the balance. The antitheses are scraped down to an exact equipoise.

86. doctas figuras: Doctus, Scaliger’s correction, which requires, moreover, a period at figuras, is unnecessary. Doctas figuras, like artes doctae, dicta docta, doli docti. Figurae, σχήματα, embraces ‘tropes.’—posuisse = quod posuerit. G., 533; A., 70, 5, b.

87. an: ‘what?’ ‘can it be that?’—Romule: bitter, like Titi, Romulidae, trossulus. Comp. CATULL., 29, 5. 9.—ceves: ‘Wag the tail’ keeps within bounds of possible translation.

88. men moveat? So men moveat cimex Pantilius, HOR., Sat., 1, 10, 78. The sentiment is that of the well-worn si vis me flere, dolendum est | primum ipsi tibi, HOR., A. P., 102. Moveat sc. Pedius.—quippe: is often ironical, ‘good sooth.’—protulerim: The Perf. Subj. in a sentence involving total negation.

89. cantas? ‘you sing, do you?’—fracta te in trabe pictum: Shipwrecked men appealed to charity by carrying about pictures of the disaster which had overtaken them. Comp. 6, 32. Si fractis enatat exspes | navibus, aere dato qui pingitur, HOR., A. P., 20, and JUV., 14, 302. Trabe is the wrecked vessel as it appears in the picture, although it is possible that the painting may have been put on a broken plank of the ship, in order to heighten the pathos. So Jahn.

94

90. ex umero: We say ‘on the shoulder,’ from a different point of view. G., 388, R. 2.—nocte paratum: ‘got up overnight.’

91. plorabit: an imperative future.—volet: Observe the greater exactness of the Latin expression. G., 624; A., 27, 2.—incurvasse: See v. 42, and add Liv., 28, 41, 5; 30, 14, 6; 40, 10, 5, and the S. C. de Bacanalibus (passim).

92-106. ‘But,’ rejoins the impersonal personage, whom PERSIUS always has at hand, ‘we have made great advances in art. Contrast this verse and that verse with the roughness of the Aeneid!’—‘The Aeneid rough? Well, what is smooth? [He gives a specimen of fashionable poetry.] If we had an inch of our sires’ backbone, such drivel would be impossible. And as for art—it is as easy as spitting.’

I have followed the distribution as presented in Hermann. Jahn gives vv. 96, 97 to PERSIUS, 98-102 to the interlocutor, the rest to PERSIUS. It is impossible to discuss all the arrangements that have been suggested for this passage.

92. decor: Gr. χάρις.—iunctura: is used as in v. 64, of ‘smoothness,’ ‘harmonious sequence,’ the even surface without a break. See QUINT., 9, 4, 33. All the specimen verses that follow avoid mechanically the offences against iunctura that QUINTILIAN enumerates, and do not avail themselves of the license which he accords to a grata neglegentia. There is no elision, no synaloepha, in any of them. As these fashionable verses have been held up to derision by the satirist, commentators have been busy in hunting out defects, and translators have vied with each other in absurd renderings. But Jahn has wisely warned us against an over-curious search into the supposed faults of these verses, which Vossius pronounced superior to any thing in the compositions of the critic himself. It is enough for us to know that to the ear of PERSIUS the lines lacked masculine vigor. The multiplication of diaereses, the length of the words, the careful avoidance of elision, the dainty half-rhyme of bombis and corymbis, the jingle of ablatura and flexura, may be cited as confirmations of the view of PERSIUS, but, with the exception of the desperate verse 95, the diction is in keeping with the theme. If adsonat Echo is not ridiculous in OVID (Met., 3, 505), it is not ridiculous here; and one surely needs to be told that reparabilis is not a happy adjective for Echo, who is always ‘paying back’ and making good.

95

93. cludere versum: like concludere versum (HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 40), is ‘round a verse’ (Conington), rather than ‘close a line.’—didicit: What is the subject? ‘Our man,’ ‘our poet,’ the lover of decor et iunctura? So most commentators. Heinr. makes Attis the subject. The personification of iunctura would not be too harsh for PERSIUS.—Berecynthius Attis: It suffices to refer to CATULL., 63. Berecynthus, a mountain in Phrygia.

94. Nerea: god of the sea, the water. In modern Gr. νερόν is ‘water.’ The use, which Conington calls ‘grotesque,’ is almost as ‘grotesque’ as Vulcanus for ‘fire.’ The scholiast thinks of Arion’s dolphin. Bacchus’s dolphin is as likely.

95. sic costam longo subduximus Appennino: With the close of the verse, comp. Ov., 2, 226: Aeriaeque Alpes et nubifer Appenninus; and Haupt’s note. ‘We filched a rib from the long Apennine.’ The interpretations are all unsatisfactory. The scholiast sees in the removal of the rib from the mountain a metaphor for the removal of a syllable from the hexameter. The only point worthy of notice in this remark is the emphasis laid on the spondaic verse. The Graece nugari soliti doubtless used spondaic verses more freely than the model Latin poets (comp. CATULL., 64). Some understand the words to refer to a forced march (putavi tam pauca milia subripi posse, SEN., Ep., 53, 1); others to the device attributed to Hannibal in crossing the Alps (montem rumpit aceto, JUV., 10, 153). It is all idle guess-work, without a context; but, guess for guess, the expression would suit a ‘Titanomachia,’ and the rib might answer for a weapon, as once a jaw-bone did. The jingle of the verse is like VERG., Aen., 3, 549: cornua velatarum obvertimus antennarum, quoted by the scholiast.

96. Arma virum! ‘Compare with these elegant verses Arma virum; what a rough affair!’ Not only were the opening words of a poem used to indicate the poem itself—Μῆνιν ἄειδε the Iliad, Ἄνδρα μοι ἔννεπε the Odyssey, Arma virum the Aeneid—but the first verses were considered peculiarly significant. So the metrical structure of the first verse of the Iliad is very different from that of the first verse of the Odyssey. Arma virum, etc., with its short words and its frequent caesurae, was harsh to the ear of the interlocutor, and is compared with the rough, cracked bark of the cork-tree.—spumosum et cortice pingui: ‘frothy and fluffy’ (Conington). AS USUAL, PERSIUS works out his comparison into minute details.

96

97. vegrandi subere: So Jahn, instead of praegrandi subere. Do not translate ‘huge, overgrown bark’ (Conington), but ‘dwarfed, stunted cork-tree.’ See Ribbeck (Beiträge zur Lehre von den lateinischen Partikeln, S. 9), who has discussed ve and this verse at some length. Both Conington and Pretor admire the metaphysics of Jahn, who has ‘explained, after FESTUS and NONIUS, vegrandis as male grandis, so as to include the two senses attributed to it by GELL., 5, 12; 16, 5, of too small and too large.’ But ve- means separation (Vaniček, Etym. Wb., S. 166); ve-cor-s, ‘out of one’s mind;’ ve-sanu-s, ‘out of one’s sound senses;’ ve-grandi-s, ‘shrunkened,’ ‘dwarfed,’ ‘undergrown’ (if the word is admissible). For the growth of the cork-tree, R. refers to PLIN., N. H., 16, 8, 13: suberi minima arbor—cortex tantum in fructu, praecrassus ac renascens atque etiam in denos pedes undique explanatus. Some of the best commentators give these two verses (96 and 97) to PERSIUS, and consider Arma virum as an invocation of the shades of VERGIL, ‘as HORACE, A. P., 141, contrasts the opening of the Odyssey with Fortunam Priami cantabo.’ Hoc is supposed to refer to the specimen verses. Ribbeck also (l.c.) regards the swollen, light bark of the low cork-tree as the image of the genus tumidum et leve, as opposed to the grande et grave.—coctum: ‘thoroughly dried.’

98. Quidnam igitur: Igitur is not unfrequently used in questions, as our ‘then.’ So quidnam igitur censes? JUV., 4, 130. But, unless the question is a rejoinder, it is not very appropriate. ‘If the Aeneid is rough, give us something really soft,' would be a fit reply to Arma virum, etc., in the mouth of the objector. Conington, who gives 96-98 to PERSIUS, connects thus: 'If these are your specimens of finished versification, give us something peculiarly languishing.'—laxa cervice: the attitude of the mobile guttur, v. 18.

99. Torva mimalloneis: PERSIUS can not wait for a specimen, and gives one himself. This is much more dramatic than the arrangement, which makes the respondent cite the verses. The verses are attributed to Nero by the scholiast, and in fact Nero is said to have composed a poem on the Bacchae, DIO., 61, 20. The theme is so common that no conclusion is to be drawn from that statement. Mr. Pretor, who understands by iunctura 'a resetting of old verses,' regards 99-102 as a weak réchauffé of CATULL., 64, 257 seqq., and compares TAC., Ann., 14, 16.—Torva: 'grim.' So t or v u m que repente | clamat, VERG., Aen., 7, 399 (of Bacchanalian madness).—mimalloneis: from Mimas, on the coast opposite Chios. With the whole verse comp. multis raucisonos efflabant cornua bombos, CATULL., 64, 264, and LUCR., 4, 544.

100. vitulo superbo: variously caricatured as 'the haughty, the scornful calf.' No such effect could have been produced by the original. Comp. ταῦροι ὕβρισται, EUR., Bacch., 743 (Jahn); γαιροτέρα μύσχω, THEOCR., 11, 21; equae superbiunt, PLIN., 10, 63. The Bacchanal rending of animals is familiar.—ablatura: On this free use of the future participle, see G., 672; A., 72, 4.

101. Bassaris: a Bacchante. Jahn cites a Greek epigram (ANTH. PAL., 6, 74), which shows how close a resemblance may be due simply to community of theme.—lynxem: 'The lynx was sacred to Bacchus as the conqueror of India.'

102. euhion: Gr. εὐϊον, Accus. of εὐϊος (commonly but falsely spelled Evius), Euhius, Bacchus.—reparabilis: Actively, as HORACE'S dissociabilis, Od., 1, 3, 22; 'renewing,' 'restoring,' 'reawakening.' So OV., Met., 1, 11, of the moon: reparat nova cornua.—adsonat: 'chimes in.'

103. testiculi vena ulla paterni: 'Honestius expressit, OV., Her., 16, 291: si sint vires in semine avorum.' 'If we had one spark of our fathers' manhood alive in us' (Conington).

104. delumbe: 'backboneless,' 'marrowless.' Comp. ἰσχιορρωγικός—saliva: Spittle is 'foolish rheum' as well as tears.

105. in udo est Maenas et Attis: 'Your Maenas and your Attis—it drivels away.'

106. nec pluteum caedit, etc.: Pluteus, which is commonly rendered 'desk,' is, 'according to the scholiast, the back-board of the lecticula lucubratoria,' or studying-sofa, such as Augustus indulged in, SUET., Aug., 78; comp. v. 53. 'The man lies on his couch after his meal, listlessly drivelling out his verses, without any physical exertion or even motion of impatience' (Conington). PERSIUS underrated the artistic finish, as he has overdrawn the moral conclusion.—demorsos: 'bitten down to the quick.' Et in versu faciendo | saepe caput scaberet vivos et roderet unguis, HOR., Sat., 1, 10, 70.

98

107-121. M. But what is the use of offending people? We must not tell the truth at all times. You will have a cool reception at certain great houses. Nay, the dog will be set on you.—P. Well! I make no struggle. Every thing is lovely. No nuisance, you say. All right. Boys, let us go somewhere else. But there was LUCILIUS—he wielded the lash, he gnawed the bones of his victims. There was HORACE—he probed his friend's heart and punched him in the ribs, and had the town dangling from the gibbet of his tip-tilted nose. And I am not to say—Bo! Not all to myself? Not with a ditch for my confidant? Nowhere? Nowhere, you say? But I will. I have found a place—a ditch. It is my book. Here, book, is my great secret: 'All the world's an ass.' What a relief!

107. quid: What case?—radere: 'rasp.'—mordaci vero: Verum is so completely a substantive that there is no difficulty about mordaci vero (comp. G., 428, R. 2). Much bolder is generoso honesto, 2, 74; opimum pingue, 3, 32.

108. vidē: like cavē, and other iambic Imperatives. G., 704, 2; A., 78, 2, d.—sis = si vis, to soften the Imperative, 'pray do.'—maiorum tibi forte: HOR., Sat., 2, 1, 60: O puer ut sis | vitalis metuo et maiorum ne quis amicus | frigore te feriat. Maiores = 'grandees.'

109. limina frigescant: like the modern slang, 'leave one out in the cold.' Limen is used in many Latin turns where 'threshold' would be too stately in English. Mrs. Gamp would render: 'the great man's cold doorsteps will settle on your lungs.'—canina littera: 'R is for the dog,' SHAKSP., Romeo and Jul.; 'A dog snarling R,' BEN JONSON. See Dictionaries, s.v. hirrire. Gr. ἀραρίζειν. An allusion to the familiar cave canem. 'The snarl is that of the great man' (Scholiast). Conington compares ira cadat naso, 5, 91. The obvious interpretation is the right one. 'There is a sound of snarling in the air,' refers simply to the great man's dog, which will be set on the unwelcome satirist.

99

110. per me: 'for all I care,' ἐμοῦ γ' ἔνεκα, a familiar use of the preposition per: per me habeat licet, PLAUT., Mercat., 5, 4, 29.—equidem: Not for ego quidem, although this opinion affected the practice of CICERO, HORACE, VERGIL, QUINTILIAN, the younger PLINY. SALLUST, like VARRO, combines equidem with every person. So Ribbeck (l.c. S. 36), who derives equidem from e interj. and quidem. Conington tries to save the rule here by making the expression equivalent to equidem concedo. Another exception is found 5, 45, where C. goes through the same legerdemain: non equidem dubites, 'I would not have you doubt.'—alba: 'lovely,' 'whitewash them as much as you please.'

111. nil moror, etc.: The whole line, indeed the whole passage, is strongly conversational in its tone. Nil moror, 'I don't wish to be in your way, to spoil sport.' Comp. TER., Eun., 3, 2, 7, and Gesner, s.v. moror.—bene: Comp. CIC., Fam., 7, 22: bene potus. See also note on 4, 22.—mirae res: 'wonders of the world' (Conington), 'miracles of perfection.'

112. hoc iuvat? 'I hope that is satisfactory.'—veto quisquam faxit oletum: 'commit no nuisance.' Observe the legal tone. Quisquam, on account of the negative idea. The negative ne is omitted after veto as often after caveo. G. 548, R. 2; A., 57, 7, a. Faxit, a disputed form. G., 191, 5; A., 30, 6, e.

113. pinge duos anguis: 'a sign of dedication rather than of prohibition' (Pretor). The dedication involves the prohibition. This is one of the innumerable phases of serpent-worship. For the serpent, as the symbol of the genius loci, which is Greek as well as Latin, see VERG., Aen., 5, 95, and the commentators. The reading pinguedo sanguis of some of the best MSS. may be mentioned, animi causa.

114. secuit: 'cut to the bone.'—Lucilius: The loci classici are HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 6; 1, 10, 1; 2, 1, 62; JUV., 1, 19, 165. The testimonia de Lucilio have been collected and annotated by L. Müller, LUCIL., p. 170 seqq.; p. 288 seqq.

115. Lupe, Muci: L. Cornelius Lentulus Lupus Cons. A.U.C. 598, and P. Mucius Scaevola Cons. A.U.C. 621, JUV., 1, 154.—genuinum: 'Breaking the back-tooth' shows the eagerness with which the satirist gnawed the bones of his victims. Comp. PETRON., 58: venies sub dentem, 'you will be "chawed" up.'

116. A deservedly admired characteristic of HORACE.—vafer: a hard word to catch. Vafer crowns the formidable list of synonyms in the well-known passage of CIC., Off., 3, 13, 57: versuti, obscuri, astuti, fallacis, malitiosi, callidi, veteratoris, vafrī, 'a shuffler, a hoodwinker, a trickster, a cheat, a designing rascal, a cunning fox, a blackleg, a sly dog.' The indirectness of vafer may sometimes be rendered by 'politic,' 'adroit.' 'Rogue' is a tolerable equivalent.—amico: is much happier than amici would be; it makes the friend a party to the game. Horatius qui ridendo verum dicit (Sat., 1, 1, 24) tam leniter vitia tangit, ut ipse, quem tangit, amicus rideat et poetam, qui dum ludere videtur intima aggreditur, lubens admittat et excipiat (Jahn, after Teuffel).—admissus: 'gets himself let in,' 'gains his entrance' (Conington, after Gifford).

117. praecordia: 'heartstrings.'

118. excusso: PERSIUS would not be PERSIUS, if he did not give us a problem even in his best passages. Excusso naso stronger than emunctae naris, HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 8 (Jahn). According to Heinr., excusso = sursum iactato, like excussa brachia, OV., Met., 5, 596, which seems to suit suspendere. Conington renders, 'with a sly talent for tossing up his nose and catching the public on it,' doubtless with reference to 'tossing in a blanket,' a pastime not unknown to the ancients: Ibis ab excusso missus in astra sago, MART., 1, 3, 8. Comp. SUET., Otho, 2; CERVANTES, Don Quijote, 1, 17; and on the sagatio, see Friedländer, Sittengesch., 1, 25. As the blanket is drawn tight in order to effect the elevation of the person tossed, we may combine with this figure the old version of an 'unwrinkled nose,' a nose that is 'kept straight' (exporrectus) by the owner to disguise his merriment (ac si nihil tulle ageret). But this is over-interpretation, the besetting sin of the editors of PERSIUS.—callidus suspendere: On the construction, see Prol., 11.—naso: Naso suspendis adunco, HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 5. Comp. 2, 8, 64.

119. men: On ne in rhetorical questions, see v. 22.—nec clam—nec cum scrobe: 'neither to myself nor with a hole in the ground for my listener.' The negative in nefas is subdivided by nec—nec, G., 444, R. Others supply fas, G., 446, R.—nusquam: The answer of the critic, Jahn (1843). In the ed. of 1868 he writes with Hermann, nusquam? as a part of PERSIUS's question. The arrangement in the text seems to be more in accordance with PERSIUS's fashion of anticipating an answer (ἀνθυποφορά). 'Nowhere? you say.'—scrobe: Allusion to the story of Midas and his barber, for which no reader will need to be referred to OV., Met., 11, 180 seqq.

121. quis non habet? According to the Vita Persii, the poet had written Mida rex habet, intended for King Populus. Cornutus, afraid that Nero would take the fling to himself, changed the words to quis non habet? The story is not very consistent with the theory that PERSIUS went so far as to ridicule Nero's poetry.

122. ridere meum: See v. 9.—nulla: G., 304, R. 2.—vendo: 'I am going to sell,' familiar present for future; hence = vendito.

123. Iliade: Probably the Iliad of Labeo. Homer's Iliad would be too extravagant.—audaci quicumque, etc.: The poet distinctly points to the mordant Old Attic Comedy as his model; yet there is little trace of direct imitation of the worthies whom he cites, and the interval of conception is abysmal.—adflato: PERSIUS, like some other Roman poets, goes beyond reasonable bounds in the use of the Vocative as a predicate. G., 324, R. 1; A., 35, b. The Greeks were cautious, and in VERGIL the Vocative can be detached and felt as such, but not here, nor in 3, 28.—Cratino: the oldest of the famous comic triumvirate: Eupolis atque Cratinus Aristophanesque poetae, HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 1. CRATINUS was the Archilochus of the Attic stage, hence audax. See the famous characteristic in ARISTOPHANES, Eq., 527.

124. iratum Eupolidem: The epithet is borne out by the fragments.—praegrandi cum sene: ARISTOPHANES. The adjective refers to his greatness: 'the old giant.' Sene is not to be pressed. Men who come before the public early are often called old before their time. Hannibal calls himself an old man when he was only in his forty-fourth year, LIV., 30, 30. Others understand sene as a compliment to an 'ancient' author. Instead of ARISTOPHANES, Heinrich and others suppose that LUCILIUS is meant. Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 1, 34: vita senis, although LUCILIUS was only about forty-five at the time of his death—but see L. Müller, Lucilius, p. 288.—palles: 'study yourself pale over.' The combination with the Accusative is bold, but not bolder than other cognate Accusatives. 'Gain a Eupolidean pallor' = 'a pallor due to Eupolis.' For different phases of pallere with Accus., see 3, 43. 85; 5, 184.

125. decoctius: The figure is from wine that is 'boiled down,' 'well refined.' Not 'opposed to the spumosos of v. 96' (Conington), as is shown by coctum, v. 97.—audis: 'have an ear for' (Conington).

126. inde = ab iis, 'by these' (G., 613, R. 1; A., 48, 5), 'by the study of these,' dependent on vaporata.—vaporata: 'steamed,' hence 'cleansed,' 'refined' (Jahn). Comp. purgatas aures, 5, 63; aurem mordaci lotus aceto, 5, 86.—lector mihi ferveat: Mihi really depends on ferveat, though it may be conveniently translated by 'my' with lector. 'Let my reader be one who comes to me with his ears aglow from the pure effluence of such poetry.'

127. non hic: Hic is different in tone from is, more distinctly demonstrative, and hence more distinctly contemptuous.—in crepidas: The simple Accusative with ludere is the regular construction. Crepidae, a part of the Greek national dress. Comp. Suet., Tib., 13: redegit se [Tiberius], deposito patrio habitu, ad pallium et crepidas. Hence fabulae crepidatae of tragedies with Greek plots.—Graiorum: the rarer and more stilted form for Graecorum, perhaps by way of rebuking the impertinence of this stolid would-be wag.

128. sordidus: 'low creature,' 'dirty dog.' Himself vulgar, he can not understand refinement of manners or attire.—qui possit: Casaubon reads poscit to match gestit. But Indicative and Subjunctive may well be combined, the former of a fact, the latter of a characteristic: 'a man who — and a man to —.' So in the famous line: sunt qui non habeant, est qui non curat habere, HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 182.—lusce: 'Old One-eye' (Conington). The lowness of the wit is evident. In v. 56 the poet appears to break his own rule, but baldness and corpulence are in his eyes badges of vice, not simple misfortunes.

129. aliquem: G., 301.—Italo: 'provincial.'—supinus = superbus. The head is thrown back with the chin in the air, a familiar stage attitude. Others render 'lolling at his ease.'

103

130. fregerit: G., 541; A., 63, 2.—heminas iniquas: 'short half-pint measures.' This was the duty of the aedile.—Arreti: Arretium in Etruria. So JUVENAL takes Ulubrae as the type of a small provincial town: vasa minora | frangere pannosus vacuis aedilis Ulubris, 10, 102.

131. abaco: The abacus was a slab of marble or other material which was covered with sand (pulvis), for the purpose of drawing mathematical figures or making calculations (Jahn). Or pulvere may be dissociated from abaco, and then abacus would be a counting-board, pulvis, the sand on the ground (eruditus pulvis, CIC., N. D., 2, 18, 48), familiar from the story of the murder of Archimedes.—metas: 'cones.'

132. scit: as if this were a feat. Comp. v. 53.—risisse: γέλασαι, 'to have his laugh at,' one of the Perfect Infinitives mentioned in note on v. 41.—vafer: ironical.—gaudere paratus: Paratus, as a Participle from parare, takes the Infinitive with ease. The grammars generally treat it as an exceptional Adjective. Here paratus is οἶος; 'just your man to have a fit of glee.' Comp. PETRON., 43: paratus fuit quadrantem de stercore mordicus tollere.

133. Cynico barbam: 'a Cynic's beard for him.' G., 343, R. 2. Vellunt tibi barbam | lascivi pueri, HOR., Sat., 1, 3, 133 (of a Stoic). The beard was the badge of a philosopher.—nonaria: so called because women of that class were not allowed to ply their trade before the 'ninth hour'—'callet,' 'trull.'—vellat: because dependent; otherwise gaudet si vellit. G., 666; A., 66, 2. The Cynic philosopher and the nonaria (ὁ καὶ ἡ κύων) belong to each other by elective affinity, ALCIPHON, 3, 55, 9. See an amusing parallel between philosopher and courtesan in the same sophist, 1, 34; and on the worst specimens of the 'Capuchins of antiquity,' as the Cynics have been called, comp. Friedländer, Sittengesch., 3, 572.

134. edictum: 'play-bill,' after SEN., Ep., 117, 30. Others, 'the business of the courts,' the praetor's court being a favorite lounging-place.—prandia: See v. 67.—Calliroen: possibly one of the elegidia procerum (v. 51), after the order of Phyllis and Hypsipyle (v. 34). Comp. Ov., Met., 9, 407, Rem. Am., 455-6. Others suppose that PERSIUS meant a nonaria. See note on 6, 73, and comp. PLUTARCH, Quaest. Conv., 3, 6, 4. With this gracious permission, Casaubon compares the edict of HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 8: Forum putealque Libonis | mandabo siccis, adimam cantare severis.

104

SECOND SATIRE.

THE theme of this Satire is the Wickedness and Folly of Popular Prayers. The true philosopher is the only man that knows how to pray aright, and the Stoic is your only true philosopher. Compare, on the subject of prayer, the Second Alcibiades ascribed to PLATO.

ARGUMENT.—Macrinus, you may well salute your returning birthday. Your wishes on that day of wishes are pure, whereas most of our magnates pray for what they dare not utter aloud. Any one can hear their requests for sound mind and good report, but the petitions for the death of an uncle, a ward, a wife, the prayer for sudden gain, are mere whispers (1-15). Strange that, in order to prepare for such impieties as these, men should go through all manner of lustral services, and trust to the ear of Jove what they would not breathe to any mortal (15-23). Strange that men should fancy because Jove is not swift to strike the sinner dead that he may be insulted with safety, or easily bought off by a lot of greasy chitterlings (24-30).

Pass from wicked to foolish prayers. Grandam and aunt would have skinny Master Hopeful a wealthy nabob, would have him make a great match. Girls are to scramble for him, and roses spring up beneath his feet. Silly petitions! Refuse them, Jupiter (31-40). Nor less silly are those prayers whose fulfilment the suppliant himself defeats—prayers for a hale old age, despite rich made-dishes (41-43); prayers for wealth, while the worshipper expends his whole substance in sacrifice (44-51).

The trouble lies in this, that men judge the gods by themselves. Because gold brings a joyous flutter to their hearts, they think to sway the gods by gold, and change to gold the vessels of the sanctuary. The gods are measured by our 'accursed blubber,' that flesh which corrupts all that it handles. Yet the flesh tastes what it touches, and enjoys the ruin which it has wrought. But what can a pure god do with our gold? To him it is a spent toy, an idle offering. Let us give the gods honest and upright hearts, and a handful of meal will suffice to gain their blessing (32-75).

Although the colors of the piece pale before the rhetorical glare of Juvenal's Tenth Satire, which treats of a kindred theme—the 'Vanity of Human Wishes'—the philosophical commonplace is handled with considerable vigor, and with all the picturesque detail of the author's style. And Montaigne, who, as a moralist, quotes PERSIUS very often, has garnished the 56th essay of his First Book with copious extracts from this Satire.

105

1-15. Macrinus, your prayers are pure, you need no private audience of the gods. Not so the petitions of many of our foremost men. Far different is what they say and what they whisper, when they come before the gods in prayer.

1. Hunc diem: The birthday was always a high-day in Rome, as elsewhere. In French, fête is a synonym of birthday.—Macrine: 'Plotius Macrinus, the scholiast says, was a learned man, who loved PERSIUS as his son, having studied in the house of the same preceptor, Servilius. He had sold some property to PERSIUS at a reduced rate' (Conington).—meliore: sc. solito. G., 312, 2; A., 17, 5.—lapillo: The Scythians used to drop into a quiver a stone for every day, white for the good and black for the bad, and when life was over the stones were counted. There is a similar story of the Thracians, PLIN., H. N., 7, 40, 41 (Jahn). The phrase 'white stone' is so common that one passage will suffice as a parallel: Felix utraque lux diesque nobis | signandi melioribus lapillis, MART., 9, 52, 4.

2. labentis: not simply an epitheton ornans, 'the gliding years,' but 'the years as they glide away.' Eheu, fugaces, Postume, Postume | labuntur anni, HOR., Od., 2, 14, 1.—apponit: 'puts to your account.' Comp. quem fors dierum cumque dabit lucro | appone, HOR., Od., 1, 9, 15. Each day lived may be a day gained or a day lost. Comp. also HOR., Od., 2, 5, 15.—candidus: λευκή ἡμέρα, λευκὸν εὐάμερον φάος, SOPH., Ai., 709. Comp. CATULL., 8, 3: fulsere vere candidi tibi soles.

3. genio: 'The tutelary Deity, or "guardian angel," who was supposed to attend on every individual from the cradle to the grave. Its cultus was strictly materialistic, and should be compared with the offerings of meat, drink, and clothes which were made to the manes of the dead. Comp. CENSORIN., De Die Nat., 3; SERV. ad VERG., Georg., 1, 302; HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 187: scit Genius, natale comes qui temperat astrum | naturae deus humanae, mortalis in unum | quodque caput, vultu mutabilis albus et ater. In character it was the reflex of the man (comp. Sat. 6, 48, where it represents the felicitas of the emperor); it might be humored and appeased by proper attention, more especially by sacrifice (comp. 5, 151), or irritated and made baneful by neglect (comp. 4, 27; JUV., 10, 129). From these latter passages it would appear to represent the alter homo, or second self.' So Pretor. The genius is the divine element which is born with a man, and when he dies becomes a lar, if he is good; if he is wicked, a larva, or a lemur. Departed genii were called manes—'good fellows'—doubtless with a view to propitiation.—non tu: Comp. 1, 45.—emaci: 'chaffering, haggling.' Prayer was often conceived as bargain and sale. See v. 29, and PLATO, Euthyphro, 14E (Jahn). By the prece emaci is meant the votum, or vow, the εὐχή, and not the προσευχή, as GREGORY of Nyssa puts it (De Orat., Ed. Paris. a. 1638, Tom. 1, p. 724D). Casaubon compares HOR., Od., 3, 29, 59: ad miseris preces | decurrere et votis pacisci.

106

4. seductis: Comp. paulum a turba seductior audi, 6, 42.—nequeas: G., 633; A., 65, 2.

5. at bona pars: Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 1, 61: at bona pars hominum.—libabit: Gnostic or sententious future. See 3, 93. Jahn comp. JUV., 8, 182: quae | turpia cerdoni Volesos Brutumque decebunt. 'That which is done is that which shall be done.' The other reading, libavit (gnomic Perfect), is not so good. See G., 228, R. 2, and Dräger, Histor. Synt. der lat. Sprache, § 127.

6. haud cuivis: Comp. non cuivis homini contingit, HOR., Ep., 1, 17, 36.—humilis: 'that keep near the ground,' 'groundling,' hence 'low.' PERSIUS delights in rare epithets.

7. aperto vivere voto: Comp. MART., 1, 39, 6: si quis erit recti custos, mirator honesti | et nihil arcano qui roget ore deos.

8. Mens bona: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 16, 59.—Mens bona, fama, fides: are commonly considered to be the things prayed for. They are possibly persons prayed to. 'Such notions as Welfare (salus), Honesty (fides), Harmony (concordia), belong to the oldest and holiest Roman divinities' (Mommsen).—hospes: 'a stranger,' 'any body.'

9. o si: On this form of the wish, see G., 254, R. 1; A., 57, 4, b. O si may be considered an elliptical conditional sentence, but as the ellipsis is emotional it must not be supplied. Such an apodosis as scholars are prone to understand for the Greek (καλῶς ἂν ἔχοι) bene sit, would change the wish into a thought. In this passage the apodosis, which is involved in praeclarum funus, comes limping in as an afterthought.

107

10. ebulliat: is slang. Comp. tam bonus Chrysanthus animam ebulliat, PETRON., 42 (nos non pluris sumus quam bullae, ibid.); SEN., Apocolocynt., 4. Conington renders 'go off.' 'Kick the bucket' would be worthy of PERSIUS. Ebulliat must be read ebulljat (G., 717). The best MSS. have ebullit, but such a Subjunctive would be more than doubtful (G., 191, 3; Neue, Formenl., 2, 339).—praeclarum funus: Either 'that would be a grand funeral,' or 'that would be a corpse worth seeing.' In the former case the man of prayer tries to salve his conscience by promising his uncle (comp. 1, 11) a 'first-class funeral.' Comp. funus egregie factum laudet vicinia, HOR., Sat., 2, 5, 105. In the latter, he is welcoming the death of the crabbed old man. For funus, in this connection, Jahn compares PROP., 1, 17, 8: haecine parva meum funus harena teget? The half-light of the passage is well suited to the paltering knavery of the prayer.

11. sub rastro, etc.: HOR., Sat., 2, 6, 10: O si urnam argenti fors quae mihi monstret, ut illi | thesauro invento, qui mercennarius agrum | illum ipsum mercatus aravit, dives amico | Hercule.

12. Hercule: This is Hercules πλουτοδότης, to whom the Romans consecrated a tithe of their gains. Mommsen and others dissociate this Hercules from the Greek Ἡρακλῆς. According to Casaubon and the schol. (v. 44), Hermes (Mercury) is the bestower of windfalls found on the way, Hercules the patron of sought treasures.—pupillum: The Twelve Tables provided that where no guardian was appointed by will, the next of kin would be guardian, and he would of course be heir' (Conington, after Jahn).

13. inpello: 'whose kibe I gall,' 'whom I tread hard upon.'—expungam: 'get him out' (of his place in the will).—namque: gives an explanation, which serves at once to heighten and to excuse the hope. 'You see he is in a bad way already. He is going to die at any rate, and death would really be a relief to all parties.'—scabiosus: 'scrofulous.'—acri | bile: δριμεῖα χολή, Casaubon, who compares JUV., 6, 565: consulit icteric a e lento de funere matris.

108

14. tumet: Comp. turgescit vitrea bilis, 3, 8; mascula bilis | intumuit, 5, 145.—Nerio: Nerius is the usurer in HORACE, Sat., 2, 3, 69. PERSIUS borrows his names from HORACE, as HORACE borrows his from LUCILIUS—progressive bookishness, of which there are several examples. Comp. Pedius, 1, 85; Craterus, 3, 65; Bestius, 6, 37.—conditur: So Jahn (1868) and Hermann. Jahn (1843) reads ducitur with many MSS. Ducitur is not to be explained of 'being carried out to burial' (SERVIUS ad VERG., Georg., 4, 256), but in its ordinary sense of 'being married.' Nerius has got rid of two wives, and 'is actually marrying a third.' Conditur is best supported by MS. authority, and gives a sufficiently good sense. Hermann quotes, in support of conditur, MART., 5, 37, where a man survives the loss of a rich wife, and γυναῖκα θάπτειν κρεῖττόν ἐστιν ἢ γαμεῖν, CHAEREMON, ap. STOBÆUM, Sermon., 88, 22. Among the wishes in LUCIAN'S Icaromen., 25, we find ὦ θεοί, τὸν πατέρα μοι ταχέως ἀποθανεῖν (comp. v. 10), and εἶθε κληρονομήσοιμι τῆς γυναίκος, which is the key of this verse. On the use of the Dative, see G., 352, R. 1; A., 51, 4, c.

15, 16. These are the impious prayers that must be prefaced by pious observances.

15. in gurgite mergis: G., 384, R. 1; A., 56, 1, c, R.

16. bis terque: δις καὶ τρίς. G., 497.—flumine: Prol., 1. The lustral use of the bath, the pollution of the night, the peculiar virtue of running water, are common to Scriptural and classical antiquity. Lev., chap. 15. Illo | mane die, quo tu indicis ieunia nudus | in Tiberi stabit, HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 290; Ter matutino Tiberi mergetur et ipsis | verticibus timidum caput abluet, JUV., 6, 523; Ac primum pura somnum tibi discute lympha, PROP., 4, 10, 13. For parallels, see Tylor, Primitive Culture, 2, 388.

17-30. With a sudden dramatic turn, PERSIUS pins his omnipresent Second Person to the wall by an ironical question touching his conception of the divine character. 'What do you think of God? What can you think of God when you confide to him wishes that you would conceal from a Staius? Are you so bold because God is so slow? Are you so bold because God's favor is so cheaply bought?'

17. minimum est, etc.: Ironical.—scire laboro: So HOR., Ep., 1, 3, 2, and nosse laboro, Sat., 2, 8, 19.

109

18. estne ut: On this periphrasis, see G., 558; A., 70, 4, a. Si est, patre, culpam ut Antipho in se admiserit, TER., Phormio, 2, 1, 40. Comp. Hec., 3, 5, 51; 4, 1, 43; Adelp., 3, 5, 4; HOR., Od., 3, 1, 9.—curas: Curare, with Inf. usually has a negative (3, 78) or equivalent, as here.

19. 'cuinam?' cuinam? The first cuinam is the question of the other man, the second the echo of PERSIUS. Comp. AR., Ach., 594: ἀλλὰ τίς γὰρ εἶ; Δ. ὅστις; πολίτης χρηστός.—vis: Comp. 1, 56.—Staiio: Staius can not be identified—homuncio nobis ignotus (König)—and, as Jahn admirably remarks, it makes no difference who he was, whether Staienus, as the scholiast says (CIC., Verr., 2, 32, 79; pro Cluentio, 7, 24, 65), or an average Philistine, or a typical scoundrel. The name was a common one. Jones is measured with Jupiter.—an scilicet haeres: 'what? are we to suppose that you are hesitating?'

20. quis: may be for uter. Comp. CIC., Att., 16, 14, 1; Fam., 7, 3, 1; CAES., B. G., 5, 44. 'Which of the two is the better judge?' And this is the more satisfactory rendering if Staius is a neutral character. If he is a villain, 'who would be a better judge' or 'better as a judge,' is more suitable.

21. inpellere: 'smite' (VERG., Georg., 4, 349; Aen., 12, 618), a rather strong word for humilis susurros. Pretor renders 'quicken;' Conington, 'have an effect on.' 'Reach' is about what is meant. With the thought of the passage, comp. SEN., Ep., 10, 5, cited by Casaubon: Nunc quanta dementia est hominum? Turpissima vota diis insurrant: si quis admoverit aurem, conticescent; et quod hominem scire nolunt, deo narrant.

22. agedum: Age dum hoc mi expedi primum, TER., Eun., 4, 4, 27. Dum shows impatience. 'Be at it,' or 'be done with it,' as the case may be.—clamet: Dic—clamet = si dicas—clamet. G., 594. 4; A., 60, 1, b.

23. sese non clamet: Iovem would make the joke clearer, but PERSIUS would have had to pound his desk and bite his nails to get Iovem in. 'Because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself,' Hebr., 6, 13. König compares HOR., Sat., 1, 2, 17: Maxime, quis non, | Juppiter, exclamat simul atque audivit?

110

24. 'The guilty worshipper is in a grove (Lucis, v. 27) during a thunderstorm; the lightning strikes not him but one of the sacred trees, and he congratulates himself on his escape—without reason, as PERSIUS tells him. The circumstances are precisely those used by LUCRETIUS to enforce his skeptical argument, 6, 390 and 416' (Conington).

25. sulphure sacro: 'lightning.' Comp. the Greek θειον, once innocently derived from the Adjective θειος.—tuque domusque: Comp. JUV., 13, 206: cum prole domoque. The editors cite the oracle in HEROD., 6, 86, 3: πάσαν | συμμάρφας ὀλέσει γενεήν καὶ οἶκον ἅπαντα.

26. fibris: the extremities of the liver, λόβοι.—Ergenna: an Etruscan name. The Etruscans were great bowel-searchers (haruspices) and lightning-doctors.

27. lucis: local Abl. and poetic Plural.—bidental: According to a law of Numa, whosoever was struck dead by lightning was buried where he fell, and the spot was inclosed. The place was called puteal, from the resemblance of the inclosure to a well-curb, or bidental, because of the oves bidentes (sheep with upper and lower teeth, hence 'full grown') sacrificed in the consecration of the spot, which was invested with a holy horror (triste), and might not even be looked at (evitandum). Here bidental is transferred from the place to the person: 'a trophy of vengeance' (Conington), 'a monument of wrath' (Gifford). Triste bidental, HOR., A. P., 471.

28. idcirco: Emphatic resumption.—vellere = vellendam. G., 424, R. 4; A., 57, 8, f. On the phrase vellere barbam, comp. 1, 133. Jupiter was always represented as bearded, γενειήτης, LUCIAN, Sacrif., 11. 'Jove, will nothing wake thee? | Must vile Sejanus pull thee by the beard | ere thou wilt open thy black-lidded eyes | and look him dead?' BEN JONSON, Sejan., 4, 5.

29. aut: Another (negatived) case. See G., 460, R.; A., 71, 2.—quidnam est, qua mercede = quanam mercede; unusual. Not dissimilar, CAES., B. G., 5, 31: Omnia excogitantur quare nec sine periculo maneatur et languore militum et vigiliis periculum augeatur.

30. emeris: Jahn compares praebere and dare aurem, to which Conington adds commodare, HOR., Ep., 1, 1, 40.—pulmone: for the larger, lactibus for the smaller intestines γαλακτίδες. 'The details are mentioned contemptuously' (Conington). Comp. JUV., 6, 540; 10, 354; 13, 115.

111

31-40. Thus far we have had wicked prayers; now we have specimens of silly prayers, of old wives' wishes.

31. Ecce: transitioni servit (Casaubon). See 1, 30. The showman puts in a new slide, and says 'Look here.'—avia aut matertera: The doting fondness of grandmothers, aunts, and nurses is proverbial. Their affection is not tempered by responsibility; hence their indiscretion. Matertera is the mother's sister, as amita (whence 'aunt') the father's; but, significantly enough, there is not the same moral distinction as between patruus and avunculus (whence 'uncle').—metuens divum: δεισιδάμων. G., 374, R. 1; A., 50, 3, b.—cunis: Dat. is more picturesque than Abl.

32. exemit: The Perf. brings the scene before us, and makes it particular instead of generic.—uda: 'slobbering.'

33. infami digito: The middle finger (JUV., 10, 53) being used in mocking and indecent gesture, was considered on that very account to have more power against fascination. The notion still survives, and is embodied in coral 'amulets' or 'charms' (brelouques) manufactured at Genoa.

—lustralibus: The lustral day for a girl was the eighth, for a boy the ninth. Such a day would be the day for vows and prayers. On the corresponding Gr. ἀμφιδρόμια, see the Classical Dictionaries.—ante: adverbial, 'first of all.'—salivis: Spittle has manifold medical and magical virtues among all nationalities. Comp. PLIN., H. N., 28, 4, 22; JUV., 8, 112; PETRON., 131. The Plural is poetical, perhaps intimating abundance.

34. expiat: 'charms against mischief' (Conington).—urentis: 'blasting,' 'withering,' μαράνοντας.—oculos: If the belief in the 'evil eye' is not too well known and too widely spread to need illustration, comp. VERG., Ecl., 3, 103; HOR., Ep., 1, 14, 37. On the philosophy of the evil eye, see PLUTARCH, Quaest. Conv., 5, 7.—inhibere perita: On the construction, see Prol., 11.

35. manibus: We say 'in,' Prol., 1. Translate 'arms,' as often.—quatit: IL., 6, 474: αὐτὰρ ὁ γ' ὄν φίλον υἷὸν ἐπεὶ κύσε πῆλ' ἔτε χερσιν, | εἶπεν ἐπευξάμενος Δίτ' ἄλλοισιν τε θεοῖσιν. 'Dances,' 'dandles.'—spem macram: 'the skinny hope.'

36. Licini: Licinus, originally slave and steward of Caesar, then set free and made procurator of Gaul, where he acquired immense wealth by extortion. Comp. JUV., 1, 109: Ego possideo plus | Pallante et Licinis.—Crassi: a still more familiar synonym for wealth, CIC., Att., 1, 4, 3. The two combined in SEN., Ep., 119, 9: Quorum nomina cum Crasso Licinoque numerantur.—mittit: 'transports,' 'wafts' (Pretor); 'packs off' (Conington), is not in keeping with the mock-lyrical tone of the passage.

112

37. hunc: δεικτικῶς König comp. CATULLUS, 62, 42: Multi illum pueri, multae optavere puellae. On optet, comp. G., 281, Exc. 1; A., 49, 1, d.—rex et regina: Comp. 1, 67. 'My lord and [my] lady' (Conington). As the prayer is extravagant, Pretor thinks that the words are to be taken literally, and Conington inclines to the same opinion. But there is no objection to regina for domina in itself, MART., 10, 64.

38. rapiant = diripiant, ἀρπάζουεν. 'May the girls have a scramble for him.' The sexes are to be reversed in his honor. Casaubon comp.: Editum librum continuo mirari homines et diripere coeperunt, Vita Persii.—rosa fiat: Casaubon comp. CLAUD., Seren., 1, 89: Quocumque per herbam | reptares, fluxere rosa e. A fairy-tale wish. Comp. THEOCR., 8, 41; VERG., Ecl., 7, 59.

39. ast = at + set. G., 490; R.—nutrici: Quid voveat dulci nutriticula maius alumno, HOR., Ep., 1, 4, 8. With the sentiment of the passage Casaubon comp. SEN., Ep., 60, 1: Etiannum optas quod tibi optavit nutrix aut paedagogus aut mater? Nondum intellegis quantum mali optaverint?

40. albata: ‘clad in white,’ the proper attire of worshippers, TIBULL., 2, 1, 13; PLAUT., Rud., 1, 5, 12 (Jahn). Hence ‘though she ask it with every requisite form’ (Conington). See v. 15.

41-51. From wicked wishes we have passed to silly wishes, from silly we now pass to insane. Men pray for health and pray for wealth, and all the while are doing their utmost to break down their health and squander their wealth.

41. nervis: ‘thews,’ ‘sinews.’—senectae: may depend on poscis opem or on fidele (Casaubon’s view), ‘to stand you in stead in old age’ (Conington), or ‘to stand your old age in stead.’ The latter is the more forcible.

42. esto: ‘so far, so good’ (Conington).—grandes patinae, etc.: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 2, 95: Grandes rhombi patinaeque | grande ferunt una cum damno dedecus. Jahn (1868) reads pingues.—tuccetaque crassa: According to the Schol., ‘beef steeped in a thick gravy, which enables it to keep a year.’ ‘Rich gravies’ (Conington); ‘rich forced meats’ (Pretor). ‘Rich potted meats.’—his = his precibus, votis.—vetuere: Perf. to show that ‘the mischief is already done’ (Pretor). It is not a general Perfect. Comp. 32.

44. rem struere: The Biblical ‘heap up riches.’ HOR., Sat., 1, 1, 35: acervo | quem struit.—caeso bove: An expensive sacrifice. Comp. Gr. βουθυτεῖν.—Mercurium: See note on v. 11. An allusion to Mercury, or rather Hermes, as the God of Flocks and father of Pan, is barely possible.

45. arcessis = in auxilium vocas (Jahn). Conington’s ‘serve a summons on’ is a caricature. Comp. OV., Fast., 4, 263, and PETRON., 122. Accerso is a rarer form than arcesso, and to be reserved for state occasions, according to Brambach.—fibra: See v. 26.—da fortunare = ut fortunent.—fortunare: used absolutely, as in AFRANIUS, v. 84 (Ribbeck). Fortuno a vox sollemnis in prayers (Jahn).—Penatis: Gods of the Basket and Store.

46. quo, pessime, pacto: HOR., Sat., 2, 7, 22: quo pacto, pessime?

47. iunicum = iuvenearum. Observe the extravagance of the sacrifice, and compare with the expression CATULL., 90, 6: omentum in flamma pingue liquefaciens.

48. extis et ferto: Comp. vv. 30, 45. Fertum (a ferendo), a kind of sacrificial cake or pudding, libi genus, quod crebrius ad sacra obmovebatur (Jahn).

49. et tamen: at tamen (Hermann), on which see 5, 159.

50-51. Casaubon sees in this passage an imitation of HESIOD, O. et D., 369: δειλή δ’ ἐνὶ πυθμένι φειδώ (sera parsimonia in fundo est, SEN., Ep., 1, 5). I have followed the old reading, which makes nummus the subject. The personification is in PERSIUS’s vein, as Schlüter correctly remarks. Comp. tacita acerra, v. 5; gemuerunt aera, 3, 39; sapiens porticus, 3, 53; modice sitiente lagoena, 3, 92. Nummi are nursed as children, 5, 149; there is a kind of personification in dolosi nummi, Prol., 12, and literature is full of personified coins, of ‘nimble sixpences,’ ‘slow shillings,’ ‘adventurous guineas.’ Add: ac velut exhausta redivivus pullulet arca | nummus, JUV., 6, 363. Paley (ap. Pretor) suggests that nequiquam may be considered the exclamation of the nummus. This gives so happy a turn that I am almost tempted to put it in the text. It is the familiar story of ‘the bottom dime,’ set to the familiar tune of the ‘Last Rose of Summer.’ Jahn makes the numbskull, not the nummus, the subject, and reads in his ed. of 1843:

Nequiquam fundo, suspiret, nummus in imo!

In his ed. of 1868 he follows Hermann, who reads:

Nequiquam fundo, suspiret, nummus in imo!

Pretor prints:

Nequiquam: fundo, suspiret, nummus in imo!

The scholiast hesitates. All much more prosaic and much less satisfactory.—suspiret: See G., 574, R.; A., 62, 2, d.

52-75. With a sudden start PERSIUS strikes at the root of the matter—the false conception of the divine character. ‘Thou thoughtest,’ saith God, ‘that I was altogether such a one as thyself,’ Ps. 50, 21. Because you love gold, you fancy that God loves gold, and judge of His Holiness by your corruption. God demands a pure heart, and not ‘thousands of rams.’ This is a plane on which the highest expressions of the most various religions meet, so that Hebrew, Greek, and Christian hold almost identical discourse. M. Martha (Moralistes Romains, p. 134) recognizes ‘a progress’ in thoughts, which are immemorial in their antiquity.

52. creterras: preferred by Jahn (1868) and Hermann to crateras, in which the Acc. Sing. of the Greek word κρατήρ seems to be taken as the stem (G., 72, R. 2). See HOR., Od., 3, 18, 7: Sat., 2, 4, 80. Comp. also statera and panthera. G. Meyer (Beitrag zur Stammbildung in Curtius, Studien, 5, 72) questions the Accus. origin.—argenti: The context indicates the material, which in prose would be ex argento or argentea (G., 396; A., 54, 2). The Genitive should give us the contents as in v. 11, argenti seria. Comp. JUV., 9, 141: argenti vascula puri.—incusa: ‘is a translation of ἐμπαιστικά (Casaubon), ἐμπαιστικὴ τέχνη being the art of embossing silver or some other material with golden ornaments (crustae or emblemata). Hence crateras argenti incusaque dona is probably a hendiadys’ (Conington). Chrysendeta, or parcel-gilt plate (Pretor).—pingui: ‘thick,’ not a generic epithet.

53. dona: Predicate.—pectore laevo: Jahn strangely follows Casaubon in understanding pectore laevo as mente laeva. Comp. VERG., Ecl., 1, 16: si mens non laeva fuisset. The side of the heart is meant. König comp. laeva parte mamillae | nil salit Arcadico iuveni, JUV., 7, 159.

54. excutiat: In his ed. of 1868 Jahn has abandoned the harsh excutias of 1843, which leaves laetari praetrepidum cor to take care of itself, with laetari as an histor. Inf. of habit. Comp. VERG., Georg., 1, 200; 4, 134; Aen., 4, 422; 7, 15.—guttas: ‘Your heart in an eager flutter of excited joy would drive the life-drops from your left breast.’ So Pretor, who adds that PERSIUS alludes to the faintness produced by any violent excitement. Comp. VERG., Georg., 3, 105: cum spes arrectae iuvenum exsultantiaque haurit | corda pavor pulsans. With guttas comp. ‘As dear to me as are the ruddy drops that visit this sad heart,’ SHAKSP. Jahn understands ‘tears,’ Heinrich ‘sweat’ (comp. JUV., 1, 167: tacita sudant praecordia culpa). In the latter case we should expect ut, as Schlüter observes.—laetari praetrepidum: ‘over-hasty to rejoice’ (Conington). For the construction, comp. Prol., 11, and HOR., Od., 2, 4, 24: cuius octavum trepidavit aetas | claudere lustrum. On the meaning of trepidum, see 1, 20.

55. illud, quod: ‘that strange fashion that,’ instead of the impersonal construction with the Inf. with a different shade of meaning (G., 525; A., 70, 5).—subiit: On the quantity of the final syllable, see G., 705, Exc. 4; A., 84, g, 5.—auro ovato: Comp. triumphato auro, Ov., Ep. ex Ponto, 2, 1, 41 (Jahn). An allusion to the ‘unjust acquisition of the gold offered to Heaven’ seems to be too modern, despite JUV., 8, 106.

56. nam: ‘for instance.’ G., 500, R. 1.—fratres aenos: ‘brazen brotherhood’ (Gifford). There are various interpretations: 1. The gods generally (Jahn). 2. The fifty sons of Aegyptus, whose statues stood in the portico of the Palatine Apollo over against those of the fifty Danaides, PROP., 2, 31, 1 seqq.; Ov., Trist., 3, 1, 59 seqq. (Scholiast). 3. The Dioscuri. The first explanation is the best. All the gods might appear in vision, but some were more famous for such appearances than others. The very existence of the statues of the sons of Aegyptus is problematical, and their connection with dreams inexplicable (Jahn). As for the Dioscuri, they were notoriously beardless youths, apart from the fact that qui mittunt points to more than two (Casaubon).

116

57. pituita: trisyllabic, as in HOR., Sat., 2, 2, 76; Ep., 1, 1, 108. Pituita, ‘phlegm,’ ‘gross humor.’ ‘That pituita was supposed to mark a heavy, cloudy intellect, is clear from the meaning of the opposite expression, emunctae naris’ (Pretor). See also the commentators on HOR., ll.cc.

58. aurea barba: CIC., N. D., 3, 34, 83: Aesculapii Epidaurii barbam auream demi iussit [Dionysius], neque enim convenire barbatum esse filium cum in omnibus fanis pater imberbis esset.

59. vasa Numae: called capedines and simpuvia.—Saturnia aera: Old coinage, according to Schol., Casaubon, and Jahn. The earliest coinage is said to have been stamped on one side with the head of Janus, the coiner, on the other with a ship, in honor of Saturn’s arrival in Italy. It is best to translate loosely by ‘brass’ or ‘bronze,’ as the explanation is far from certain.—inpulit: ‘kicked out.’

60. Vestalis urnas: always of earthenware.—Tuscum fictile: ‘Etruscan pottery.’ ‘Etruscan’ both by reason of its origin and its use in Etruscan ritual.

61. O curvae: A passionate apostrophe, which reminds M. Martha of Bossuet.—in terris: So Jahn and Hermann. We should expect in terras, but the Abl. is more forcible as denoting the fixity rather than the tendency of the position.—caelestium inanes: On the Gen., see G., 373, R. 6; A., 50, 3, c. Jahn quotes HOR., Od., 3, 11, 23: inane lymphae | dolium fundo pereuntis imo.

62. quid iuvat hoc: So Jahn. Hos, Hermann’s reading, is not necessary, though natural. Hoc often anticipates the contents of a dependent clause, as here with the Inf., 5, 45; ut with Subj., 5, 19.—templis inmittere mores: is more than ‘the opposite to v. 7: tollere de templis.’ Inmittere, ‘turn loose upon,’ like so many hostes, sicarii, etc. Mores, ‘courses of life.’

63. bona dis: Brachylogy. ‘What is good in the eyes of the gods.’—ducere: ‘infer.’—scelerata pulpa: ‘sinful, pampered flesh’ (Conington). Pulpa is the Stoic σάρξ, σαρκίδιον, in a stronger form. M. Martha (l.c. p. 133, note) says that the Christian σάρξ (caro) is borrowed from the language of philosophy. Others only note the coincidence. Pulpa may be rendered ‘blubber.’

117

64. haec: sc. pulpa.—sibi: ‘to suit its taste.’—corrupto: The oil is spoiled by the spice, VERG., Georg., 2, 465: Alba nec Assyrio fucatur lana veneno | nec casia liquidi corrumpitur usus olivi.

65. Calabrum: ‘The beauty of the Calabrian fleece consisted in its perfect whiteness,’ which is destroyed by the dye.—coxit: here in a bad sense, as we often use ‘cook,’ ‘doctor.’—vitiato: The murex is spoiled as well as the vellus; both have violence done to their natures. Comp. JUV., 3, 20: ingenuum violarent marmora tofum. On the hard treatment of the murex, or κάλχη, see St. John, Manners and Customs of Ancient Greece, 3, 225 foll.

66. bacam: ‘pearl,’ literally ‘berry.’ The transfer is explained by AUSON., Mos., 70: albentes concharum germina bacam. Diluit insignem bacam, HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 241.—rasisse: Perf., like the Greek Aor. Inf. See 1, 42.

67. massae: ‘ore.’—crudo de pulvere: ‘from their primitive slag’ (Conington).

68. vitio utitur: ‘gets some good out of its sin.’—nempe: G., 500, R. 2.

70. pupae: The ancients dedicated to the gods what they had done with. So when the girl was ripe for marriage, she hung up her dolls. The sailor hangs up his clothes, HOR., Od., 1, 5, 16; the lover his harp, Od., 3, 26, 3. The Sixth Book of the Greek Anthology is full of examples. An ingenious friend suggests that the practice of publishing a list of commentators in editions of the classics is a survival of this usage.

71. quin damus: See G., 268; A., 57, 7, d.—lance: ‘sacrificial plate,’ ‘paten.’ Ov., Ep. ex P., 4, 8, 39: nec quae de parva dis pauper libat acerra | tura minus grandi quam data lance valet (Jahn).

72. Messallae propago: Lucius Aurelius Cotta Messalinus (Schol.), an unworthy son of M. Valerius Messalla Corvinus. See Tac., Ann., 6, 7. He was a notorious debauchee in the reign of Tiberius.—lippa: alludes to the effect of his excesses. Comp. 5, 77.

73. conpositum: ‘in just balance,’ ‘well blended’ (Conington).—ius fasque: ‘duty to God and man’ (Conington).—recessus mentis: φρενῶν μυχός THEOCR., 29, 3 (Jahn).

74. incoctum: ‘thoroughly imbued.’—generoso honesto: ‘with the honor of a gentleman.’ See note on mordaci vero, 1, 107.

75. cedo: Notice the quantity. G., 190, 4; A., 38, 2, f. Cēdo, ‘give here,’ ‘let.’ For the construction: cedo ut bibam, PLAUT., Most., 2, 1, 26; cedo ut inspiciam, Curc., 5, 2, 54.—admovere: a sacrificial word.—farre litabo: Comp. HOR., Od., 3, 23, 19: mollivit aversos Penatis | farre pio et saliente mica. Litare is the Greek καλλιερεῖν, ‘offer acceptably.’ The sentiment may be illustrated without end. Comp. Θυσία μεγίστη τῷ θεῷ τό γ’ εὔσεβεῖν, MEN., Mon., 246, and EUR., fr. 329 and 940 (Nauck).

118

THIRD SATIRE.

ARGUMENT.—The Satire opens dramatically. A young Roman of the upper classes is discovered asleep, snoring off the effects of yesterday’s debauch. To him one of his familiars, half companion, half tutor, who rouses him by telling him that the sun is already high in the heavens, and it is time to be up. The young fellow bawls for his servants, brays for them, and makes a show of going to work. But nothing suits him. He curses the ink because it is too thick, then he curses it because it is too thin, and finally swears at pen and ink both. ‘You big baby,’ exclaims the monitor. ‘Do you expect me to study with such a pen?’ asks the young man with a whine. ‘Don’t come to me with your puling nonsense, you dab of untempered mortar, you unformed lump of clay. You are lazing away the time, when every minute is of moment, when the potter’s wheel should fly faster and faster, and deft hands should mould the vessel of your life (1-24). But I see you think that you have already attained perfection. You are satisfied with your position in life, move in a good circle. Tell that to the profane vulgar. I know you, every inch of you. Shame on you, that you, with your training, should live like a brutish creature, who does not know what a rich jewel he is flinging away, who sinks without a struggle in the slough of vice, whose soul dies and makes no sign. But you, who know better, will have a dire fate. No worse doom could Jove himself bring down on cruel tyrants than the vain yearning for lost virtue, which they can never hope to regain. Nay, worse than the brazen bull of Phalaris and the pendent sword of Damocles is the consciousness of sin, the pallor that blanches not the cheek only, but the very heart (25-43). You are past the age of childhood, and have not the excuse of tender years. If you were a child, I could understand your behavior. I remember my own childhood, how hateful and unprofitable task-work alternated with frivolous play, how I dodged the learning of the piece I had to speak, how I had no thought for any thing save dice and marbles and tops (44-51). But you have reached a higher level. You know the great norms of life, the doctrines of the Porch; you understand the distinctions of Right and Wrong. Pshaw! As I live, you are snoring still. Wake up, I say, and tell me—have you any aim in life? Or are you nothing better than a boy following sparrows with a pinch of salt?’ (52-62).

119

Here the poet drops the dramatic form, deserts the individuality of the student, and makes his exhortation general, reserving, of course, the right to pick out at will any member of his congregation for rebuke. He mounts the pulpit and begins to preach. His text is:

‘Be wise to-day; ‘tis madness to defer.’ Go back to the first principles of all true philosophy, the constitution of the universe, the position of man in that universe, the great laws of Ethic as derived from the great laws of Physic. In brief, study your Stoic catechism. Do not allow yourself to be diverted from higher study by success in the lower ranges of life. You lawyer there, for instance, do not let hams and sprats, the gifts of thankful clients, seduce you from the ambrosia of true philosophy (63-76).

But hark! some one is talking out in church. It is the voice of the unsavory centurion.

‘I have got all the sense I want. I would not be for all the world one of your painful philosophers, with head tucked down, eyes riveted on the ground, mumbling and muttering a lot of metaphysic trash—chimaera bombinans in vacuo—and the rest of the scholastic stuff. What! get pale for that? What! miss my breakfast for that!’

Great applause in the galleries, and a rippling reduplication of laughter from the muscular humanity of the period (77-87).

A sudden turn, or rather a sudden return to the figure of v. 63. The connection, if there be a connection, seems to be this:

Such men as the centurion are hopelessly lost, have already ‘imbodyed and imbruted.’ Like Natta, they are unconscious of their moral ruin. But there are those who, half-conscious of their condition, consult a physician of the soul, a spiritual director. The state of this class is set forth in a dramatic parable. A man feels sick, goes to see a doctor, follows his advice for a while, gets better, and then, despite all remonstrance, violates the plainest rules of diet and falls dead (88-106).

But before our preacher can make the application, he is interrupted by an impatient hearer, perhaps none other than the yawning youth, whose acquaintance we made in the beginning of the Satire. Whoever he is, he is so literal that he does not understand the drift of the apologue.

120

'Sick! Who's sick? Not I. No fever in my veins. No chill in hands or feet.'

'But,' says our resolute moralist, 'the sight of money, the meaning smile of a pretty girl, makes your heart beat a devil's tattoo. Coarse flour shows that you are mealy-mouthed, and tough cabbage brings out the ulcer in your throat. Kindle the fire of wrath beneath the cauldron of your blood, and Orestes is sane in comparison' (107-118).

According to Jahn, this Satire is aimed at those that have received a thorough training in ethics, but, owing to the weakness of human nature, fail to follow the true guide of life; and, although well aware of their short-comings, imitate the example of those brutish souls whose sins are excused by their ignorance. In short, the Satire is an expansion of the old theme—Video meliora proboque.

Knickenberg (De Ratione Stoica in Persii Satiris Apparente, p. 16 seqq.) maintains that in conformity with Stoic doctrine, it is not so much the weakness of human nature as imperfect knowledge—the inscitia debilis of v. 99—that is the source of the vices which the author lashes in the present Satire. According to the Stoic, virtue is knowledge, and the snoring youth, with his half-knowledge, which keeps him from rising to the height of virtue, is the pattern of the false philosophy of the time.

But PERSIUS is not an expounder of the Stoic philosophy, as a system, any more than SENECA is; and commentators have attributed to him a profounder knowledge of philosophy than he had, certainly a profounder knowledge than it would have been artistic to show. PERSIUS repeats the catechism of the sect, expands some of their favorite theses, elaborates some of their pet figures, and finds fault with his fellow students in the lofty tone which he had caught from his teachers. A glaring paradox, such as we find in 5, 119, he is but too happy to reproduce, but the subtle analysis for which the Stoics were famous does not appear in his poems.

The Satire is said by the Scholiast to be imitated from the Fourth Book of LUCILIUS.

1-24. A young student is roused by one of his companions, who, after meditating on his snoring form (1-4), remonstrates with him against lying abed so long. Yawning and headachy, he attempts to go to work, calls his servants testily, has his writing materials brought, swears at them, and is rebuked by his sage friend for his babyishness, and urged to make use of this golden season of life.

121

1. Nempē: The opening is made very lively by the use of nempē, which implies a preceding statement, and thus plunges at once into the thick of the dialogue. 'And so'—a clear imitation of HOR., Sat., 1, 10, 1. Comp. the English use of 'and' in the first verse of lyrics, and the common stage trick of beginning a scene with conjunctions: FARQUHAR, Beaux' Stratagem, 2, 2: 'And was she the daughter of the house?' CIBBER, The Provoked Wife, 5, 4: 'But what dost thou think will come of this business?' This effect is lost by bringing in the comes at v. 5, as some do.—mane: Substantive, the Abl. of which, mane (mani), is in more common use as an Adverb.—fenestras: 'windows,' here for 'window-shutters.'

2. extendit: 'makes wider,' 'makes seem wider,' a familiar optical effect.—rimas: 'chinks' (between the shutters).

3. stertimus: Ironical First Person, excluding the speaker.—indomitum: 'heady,' 'unmanageable' (Conington). Falernian was a strong wine: ardens, HOR., Od., 2, 11, 9; severum, Od., 1, 27, 19; forte, Sat., 2, 4, 24. Add LUCAN, 10, 162: Indomitum Meroe cogens spumare Falernum.—quod sufficiat: 'what ought to be enough.' G., 633; A., 65, 2.—despumare: 'work off,' 'carry off the fumes of' (Conington). Despumare is a technical term 'skim' (VERG., Georg., 1, 296), like 'rack' in English.

4. quintā dum linea tangitur umbrā: where we should expect quintā linea umbrā, by what is called Hypallagé. Conington compares AESCHYL., Ag., 504: δεκάτω σε φέγγει τῷδ' ἀφικόμενυ ἔτους. See Schneidewin's note.—dum: 'while,' 'whereas,' 'and yet.' Comp. G., 572, R.; A., 72, 1, c.—linea: of the sun-dial. The fifth hour (about 11 o'clock) was the time of the prandium, according to AUSON., Ephem. Loc. Ordin. Coqui, 1, 2 (Casaubon): Sosia, prandendum est, quartam iam totus in horam | sol calet: ad quintam flectitur umbra notam. In HORACE'S time breakfast was after 10 (Sat., 1, 5, 25). The sophist ALCIPHON implies that 12 was the hour in his day (3, 4, 1).

5. en quid agis? Comp. en quid ago? VERG., Aen., 4, 534. In lively questions the present is often used as a future, as: Quoi dono lepidum novum libellum? CATULL., 1, 1.—siccās: proleptic or predicative, to be combined with coquit. Conington renders 'is baking the crops dry,' but coquere is too common in this sense for such a translation, a criticism which applies to a very large proportion of Conington's picturesque versions. Coquere is the regular word for 'ripen'—Gr. πέσσω—VARRO, R. R., 1, 7, 4; 54, 1. Tr. 'is ripening hard' (in the broiling sun).—insana canicula: 'the mad dog-star' is, of course, the 'mad dog's star' (Conington). Comp. HOR., Od., 3, 29, 18; Ep., 1, 10, 16.

122

7. comitum: Comes is a wide term, embracing fellow-students and tutors. The Greek word is οἱ συνδούτες. See LUCIAN'S famous tract, περὶ τῶν ἐπὶ μισθῷ συνδούτων (de mercede conductis).

8. aliquis: 'somebody,' 'τις,' of a servant. Aperite aliquis actutum ostium, TER., Adelphi, 4, 4, 46. Ὡσπερ ἐν οἴκῳ ἐνιοι δεσπόται προστάττουσι, ἴτω τις ἐφ' ὕδωρ, εὐλα τις σχισιάτω, XEN., Cyr., 5, 3, 49.—nemon? on the rhetorical -ne, see 1, 22.—vitrea bilis: a medical term, ὑαλώδης χολή, according to Casaubon. Comp. splendida bilis, HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 141.

9. findor: 'I'm splitting,' the exclamation of the impatient youth. The old reading, finditur, 'he' or 'it' (bilis) 'is splitting,' has little MS. authority. Others read findimur.—Arcadiae pecuria: The asses of Arcady were famous in antiquity.—rudere: with u long only here and AUSON., Epigr., 76, 3.

10. iamque liber: The distribution of these articles is not without its difficulty. According to some, liber is the author to be explained by the teacher; chartae, the papyrus for rough notes; membrana, the parchment for a more careful transcript. According to others, 'liber is the author out of which the lesson or thesis is to be transcribed, and membrana the parchment wrapper for preserving the loose sheets, as the work progresses' (Pretor).—bicolor: used either of the two sides of the skin—the one from which the hair had been scraped, yellow, the other white (Casaubon), or, more probably, of the custom of coloring the parchment artificially (Jahn).—capillis: is commonly taken for pilis, a rare use. The hair side of the skin was carefully smoothed with pumice-stone. Arida modo pumice expolitum, CAT., 1, 2; cui pumex tondeat ante comas, TIB., 3, 1, 10. The old explanation, according to which positis capillis = capillis ornatis sive pexis (Plum), has found an advocate in Schlüter. The young man is supposed to have dressed his hair before he goes to work.

123

11. nodosa harundo = calamus of the next verse.

12. querimur: In his ed. of 1868 Jahn has abandoned queritur (1843) here and in v. 14. Comp. stertimus, v. 3.—calamo: In prose, de calamo.

13. nigra sepia: 'The blackness of the liquor,' Conington, who says correctly that nigra is emphatic. Sepia, 'juice of the cuttle-fish,' used for ink. Comp. AUSON., Epist., 4, 76; 7, 54 (Jahn).

14. fistula = harundo. The nib of the pen was badly slit. Comp. nec iam fissipedis per calami vias | grassetur Cnidiae sulcus harundinis, AUSON., Epist., 7, 49-50.

The whole period is very awkward, and is not improved by Jahn's sed for quod in v. 13. Mr. Pretor suspects a duplex recensio, and brackets v. 13. In any other author I should suggest dilutas quae nimis for dilutas querimur, v. 14 (Mp. querimus).

15. ultra miser = miserior.—hucine rerum: Hucine is archaic and colloquial. On rerum, see G., 371, R. 4; A., 50, 2, d. Comp. 1, 1 for the translation.

16. tenero columbo: a pet name for children (Schol.). Columbus is 'the house-pigeon,' palumbus 'the wood-pigeon.' Some of the best MSS. read palumbo, which Bentley on HOR., Od., 1, 2, 10, prefers. Notice further that nurses often feed their babies pigeon-fashion.—regum pueris: 'aristocratic babies,' 'babies of quality' (Conington). Regum as in 1, 67.—pappare: (papare, Jahn, 1843) Infin. for Substantive, 'pap.' Such Infinitives are hardly parallel with vivere triste (1, 9), and belong rather to the verba togae. They may be called nursery Infinitives. Comp. TITIN. (ap. CHARISIUM, 1, p. 99P.), v. 78 Ribb.: Date illi biber, iracunda haec est. Comp. the Greek τὸ πιεῖν, τὸ φαγεῖν, THEOCR., 10, 53; ANTHOL. PAL., 12, 34, 5. The Scholiast calls pappare and lullare 'voces mutillas.'—minutum: 'chewed fine,' 'minced.'

18. iratus: 'in a pet.'—mammae: exactly our 'mammy;' depends on lallare, not on iratus.—lallare: like pappare, 'lullaby.' 'Pettishly refusing to let mammy sing you to sleep' (Conington) —'to go by-bye for mammy.'

19. studeam: G., 258; A., 57, 6. The absolute use of studere is post-Augustan. Desidioso studere torqueri est, SEN., Ep. M., 71, 23.—Cui verba: sc. das?

124

20. succinis: 'sing to an instrument or second to a person,' hence 'to sing small' (Conington), 'come whimpering, whining with.'—ambages: 'beating about the bush,' 'shuffling excuses.' Quando pauperiem, missis ambagibus, horres, HOR., Sat., 2, 5, 9.—tibi luditur: Tua res agitur, 'it is your game,' 'your stake,' 'your affair.'—effluis amens: with a sudden change of figure. The dissolute young man is compared to a cracked jar, from which all the noble 'wine of life' (SHAKSP., Macbeth, 2, 3) is escaping. The passage in TER., Eun., 1, 2, 25, which is often cited in this connection: Plenus rimarum sum; huc atque huc perfluo refers to 'a leaky vessel,' one who can not keep a secret.

21. contemnere: A sudden desertion of the metaphor, unless contemnere be a technical term, like ἀποδοκιμάζειν, 'reject on test.' CICERO combines conterere et contemnere, contemnere et reicere, contemnere et pro nihilo putare. The Scholiast thinks that the word is an unhappy reminiscence of HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 14: contemnere miser.—sonat vitium = sono indicat vitium. Sonat vitium, like sapit mare, 'sounds flawy,' 'has a flawy ring.' The Schol. comp. VERG., Aen., 1, 328: nec vox hominem sonat.—maligne: 'ill-naturedly,' 'grudgingly,' of that which falls short of what was expected. Maligne respondet, 'gives a short answer,' 'a dull sound.'

22. viridi: = crudo, 'untempered.' The material is ill-mixed and the crock ill-baked (non cocta).

23. 'Persius steps back, as it were, while pursuing the metaphor,' is Conington's droll defence of PERSIUS'S ὕστερον πρότερον. Common critics would say that PERSIUS had bungled the figure.

—properandus et fingendus: not necessarily equivalent to propere fingendus. Comp. JUV., 4, 134: argillam atque rotam citius propere.

24-43. PERSIUS: 'I know what you are going to say. You have a fair estate, you have nothing to dread, you have good connections, you have a good position. Away with these baubles. I know you yourself. You live no higher life than the dullest sensualist, who knows not what he is losing; but the time will come when you will be roused to the consciousness of your loss, and your soul must be tortured with the expectation of impending ruin and the carking of hidden sin.'—rure paterno: G., 412, R. 1; A., 55, 3, c, R.

125

25. far modicum: Modicum with a sneer. The young man keeps up a show of Stoic moderation.—salinum—patella: two articles of plate, to which every respectable family aspired. Compare the apostle-spoons and the candle-cup of the Elizabethan period. The salinum and the patella were exempt, when all other gold and silver plate was called for to meet the necessities of the state.—purum et sine labe: literally and metaphorically.

26. quid metuas: ex animo iuvenis. The young man is supposed to ask quid metuum? See v. 19. 'I have nothing to fear on the score of poverty.'—cultrix foci: The patella was used in the worship of the Lares. Conington preserves the possible double sense of 'inhabitant' and 'worshipper,' by rendering 'a dish for fireside service.'—secura: 'that knows no fear' (of want).

27. hoc satis? This is very well, but is it enough?—an deceat: The connection is not very plain, and Jahn thinks that another person is apostrophised. PERSIUS is attacking the same man, now as to his fortune, now as to his family. That this is not clearly brought out, is simply his own fault.—ventis: 'with airs' (Pretor). See 4, 20.

28. stemmate: Abl. as a whence-case. 'Comp. JUV., 8, 1-6; Suet., Nero, 37. These stemma were genealogical trees or tables of pedigree, in which the family portraits (imagines) were connected by winding lines. Comp. stemma vero lineis discurrebant ad imagines pictas, PLIN., H. N., 25, 2, and multae stemmatum flexurae, SEN., de Benef., 3, 28' (Pretor, after Jahn).—Tusco: The Etruscans were great sticklers for family, as PERSIUS well knew. Comp. HOR., Od., 3, 29, 1; Sat., 1, 6, 1; PROP., 4, 9, 1. Your aristocratic philosopher can afford to be disdainful of birth. A Stoic commonplace: si quid est aliud in philosophia boni, hoc est quod stemma non inspicit, SEN., Ep., 44, 1.—ramum = lineam.—millesime: 'a thousand times removed' (Pretor). On the case, 1, 123. Conington recognizes a side-thrust, and compares Savage's 'No tenth transmitter of a foolish face.'

29. censorem ne: So Casaubon. Jahn (1868) reads -que, thus abandoning the reading which is best supported by MSS., but utterly unsupported by grammar, -ve. The careless use of vel after ve is one of those slips that are simply incredible, nor can -ve-vel be successfully defended by connecting the latter closely with trabeate. Pretor explains, 'because you have a censor in your family, or are yourself a knight of distinction (sc. quodve censorem tuum salutas vel quod ipse trabeatus es)'. Heine's conjecture, fatuum, with a reference to the censorship of Claudius, is itself almost fatuous. If we are to resort to conjecture, Heine's other suggestion, vetulum, would be mild. Jahn explains this line (after Niebuhr) of the municipales equites, 'Because you are a great man in your own provincial town.' Comp. 1, 129. 'In any case the allusion is to the annual transvectio of the equites before the censor, who used to review them (recognoscere) as they defiled before him on horseback. If censorem is understood of Rome, tuum will imply that the youth is related to the Emperor, like JUVENAL'S Rubellius Blandus, 8, 40; otherwise it means "your local censor"' (Conington).—trabeate: The trabea is the official dress of the equites. Comp. 1, 123.

126

30. ad populum phaleras: 'The phalerae included all the trappings of the horse and rider. They were on occasion much ornamented with metal, and POLYBIUS (6, 23) says that they were given as rewards of merit to cavalry soldiers' (Pretor, after Jahn). 'To the mob with your trappings, your stars and garters.'—intus et in cute: 'inside and out;' a rough equivalent. In cute (Gr. ἐν χροῦ) means 'closely' ('to a dot, a T'). See Lexx. s.v. χροῦς.

31. non pudet: 'You are not ashamed?' (you ought to be). See G., 455.—discincti: Comp. discinctus aut perdam nepos, HOR., Epod., 1, 34 (Schol.). The discinctus is 'a man of loose habits.'—Nattae: taken at random from HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 124.

32. stupet: ἀναίσθητεῖ (Casaubon). He is 'past feeling,' his conscience is benumbed, is 'seared with a hot iron.'—fibris increvit opimum pingue: 'his heart is overgrown with thick collops of fat' (Conington). The Scriptural parallels are familiar: Psa., 119, 70; Matt., 13, 15; John, 12, 40. The Delphin ed. comp. TERTULL., de Anima, 20: Opimitas impedit sapientiam. On opimum pingue, comp. 1, 107.

33. caret culpa: Perhaps because the Stoic would not hold him responsible, EPICTET., Diss., 1, 18. Conington well remarks that Casaubon's quotation from MENAND., Mon., 430—ὁ μηδὲν εἰδῶς οὐδὲν ἐξαμαρτάνει—does not meet the case. In MENANDER we have to do with 'a sin of ignorance' against others. Here the sin is against the man's own nature. Possibly culpa is = conscientia culpae.

127

34-43. The terrors of remorse.

34. rursum non bullit: 'he makes no bubbles,' 'makes no further struggles,' 'he is down among the dead men.'

36. velis: 'deign.' Velle gives a reverential turn to the wish.

37. moverit: Perf. Subj. Attraction of mood. G., 666; A., 66, 2.—ferventi tincta veneno: The gelidum venenum chills, this poison fires the blood. Comp. ALCIPH., 1, 37, 3: θερμότερον φάρμακον, of a love potion. Occultum inspires ignem fallasque veneno, VERG., Aen., 1, 688. Tincta is a reminiscence of the shirt of Nessus and the bridal-gift of Medea to Glaucé.

38. intabescant: belongs to the same sphere of comparison. Intabescere, κατατήκεσθαι, is hopeless pining for a lost love. Comp. THEOCR., 1, 66; 11, 14. For the figure, see OV., Met., 3, 487: ut intabescere flavae | igne levi ceræ—solent, sic attenuatus amore | liquitur.—relicta: sc. virtute. Conington comp. VERG., Aen., 4, 692: quaesivit caelo lucem ingemuitque reperta. Relicta = quod reliquerint.

39. anne = an.—Siculi iuveni: Every one has heard of the brazen bull made by Perillus for Phalaris of Agrigentum, CIC., Off., 2, 7, 26, and the sword of Damocles, in the next verse, is a proverb in English. Comp. HOR., Od., 3, 1, 17; CIC., Tusc. Dis., 5, 21, 61.—aera: poet. Plur. Vivid personification and identification.

40. auratis laquearibus = de a. l. Laquearibus, 'sunken panels (lacus) between the cross-beams of the ceiling.' See VERG., Aen., 1, 726.—ensis: a poetic word, 'glaiue,' 'brand.'

41. purpureas cervices: Damocles was arrayed in royal purple; hence purpureas (Casaubon). Others apply the expression to tyrants generally. Comp. HOR., Od., 1, 35, 12: purpurei tyranni.

42. imus: Better to have a sword hanging by a hair over your neck than yourself to be hanging above an abyss of misery. The commentators refer to Tiberius's letter to the senate (TAC., Ann., 6, 6; Suet., Tib., 67), by way of illustrating the shuddering perplexity of the sinful tyrant.—dicat: The subject is loosely involved.—intus | palleat: This 'not very intelligible expression' (Conington) is paralleled by SHAKSP., Macb., 2, 2: 'My hands are of your color, but I shame | to wear a heart so white.'

43. quod: dependent on the notion of fear contained in pallere. G., 329, R. 1; A., 52, 1, a.—proxima uxor: 'the wife at his side,' 'the wife of his bosom.'—nesciat: 'is not to know.'

44-51. You have not the excuse of an unenlightened conscience, nor have you the plea of the ignorance of boyhood. Boys will be boys. I was a boy myself, played boyish tricks, loved boyish sports. My training was bad, my behavior only to be justified by my training.

44. parvus: 'as a small boy:' Memini quae plagosum mihi parvo | Orbilium dictare, HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 70.—olivo: The boy would tip (tangere) his eyes with oil, in order to make believe, by the use of the remedy, that he was suffering from the disease. For the anointing of sore eyes, see HOR., Sat., 1, 8, 25; Ep., 1, 1, 29.

45. grandia: 'sublime.' Grandia verba is the American 'tall talk.'— nollem: Iterative conditional. G., 569, R. 2; A., 59, 5, b.—morituri Catonis: Such compositions were very much in vogue as rhetorical exercises. Comp. JUV., 1, 16 (oration to Sulla, advising a withdrawal from public life); 7, 161 (speech made for Hannibal). SENECA (Ep., 24, 6) does not seem to regard the theme of Cato's death as threadbare.

46. discere: better than dicere. The boy shirks the learning rather than the speaking, and the sore eyes would be a better excuse for the one than for the other.—non sano: Comp. PETRON., cap. 1; TAC., Or., 35, on this system of training. Hermann reads et insano.—laudanda = quae laudaret, the free adjective use of the Gerundive, which is more common in later times.

47. quae pater audiret: JUV., 7, 166: ut totiens illum pater audiat.—sudans: from excitement; hardly 'in a glow of perspiring ecstasy' (Conington). Sudans is thrown in maliciously as a comment.

48. iure: εἰκότως, 'and well I might.'—etenim: ἰσχυρῶς. Theoretically the predicate of the preceding sentence is to be repeated with the et. Practically it is often best to leave et untranslated. G., 500, R. 2 and 3; A., 43, 3, d.—senio, etc.: 'The game was played with four tali, which, unlike the tesserae, were rounded on two sides, while the other four faces were marked with one, three, four, or six pips, and called respectively unio, ternio, quaternio, senio. The canis was the worst throw, when all four tali showed single pips (Ov., A. A., 2, 206; Trist., 2, 474; MART., 13, 1, 6; PROP., 4, 8, 46), and the Venus the best, when all the faces turned up were different (LUCIAN, Amor., p. 415); or else, for it varied upon occasion, when all showed sices. The ace was a losing throw and the sice a winning one, when the pips were counted' (Pretor, after Jahn). PERSIUS wanted to know the value of each throw, what one brought in (ferret) another swept off (raderet).

49. scire erat in voto: Hoc erat in votis, HOR., Sat., 2, 6, 1.

50. angustae collo non fallier orcae: The allusion is to a game at nuces, called τρόπα or 'cherry-pit.' 'Tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan,' SHAKSP., Twelfth N., 3, 4. Fr. à la fossette. Comp. RABELAIS, 1, 2. The modern equivalent of nuces is marbles, and the modern τρόπα is 'pitch-in-the-hole,' or 'knucks.' Instead of the hole in the ground (βόθρος), the ancients used a small jar (orca), and to enhance the difficulty of getting in, the neck of this jar was made narrow (collo angustae orcae = angusto collo orcae, by Hypallagé, v. 4). So the modern hole admits but one marble. Comp. [Ov.] Nux, 85, 86: Vas quoque saepe cavum spatio distante locatur, | in quod missa levi nux cadat u n a manu.—fallier: like dicier, 1, 28.

51. neu quis = et ne quis. G., 546. 'Et [erat in voto] ne quis callidior [esset].'—buxum: 'top,' because made of 'boxwood.' Comp. VERG., Aen., 7, 382: volubile buxum.—torquere: see Prol., 11, and 1, 118.

52. You have had a better training. You have reached years of discretion. You know Right from Wrong.—curvos = pravos. Comp. scilicet ut possem curvo dinoscere rectum, HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 44, and PERSIUS, 4, 12; 5, 38.

53. quaeque docet: Quae depends by Zeugma on some notion involved in deprendere, such as tenere. G., 690; M., 478, Obs. 4.—sapiens porticus: Comp. sapientem barbam, HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 35; eruditus pulvis, CIC., N. D., 2, 18, 48.—bracatis inlita Medis: The στοὰ ποικίλη, the resort of Zeno and his school, was adorned with paintings by Polygnotus and others. One of these paintings represented the battle of Marathon, hence 'the wise Porch bepainted with the trouser'd Medes.' Inlita perhaps contemptuous, not necessarily 'frescoed.' The bracae ἀναξυρίδες, θύλακοι, a mark of barbaric luxury and display. Comp. PROP., 4, 3, 17: Tela fugacis equi et bracati militis arcus and Persica braca, Ov., Tr., 5, 10, 34 (Freund).—quibus: Neuter. Quibus et = et quibus. Trajection, G., 693.—detonsa: 'close-cropped,' for so the Stoics wore their hair, although they let their beard grow long ἐν χρῶ κουρία, LUC., Hermot., 18; Vit. Auct., 20. Comp. JUV., 2, 15: supercilio brevior coma.

55. invigilat: 'rather tautological after insomnis. Nec capiat somnos invigiletque malis, Ov., Fast., 4, 530' (Conington). Positive and negative sides of an action are more frequently combined in Latin and Greek than in English, and 'sleepless vigil' would not be strange even in English.—siliquis: 'pulse.' HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 123: vivit [vates] siliquis et pane secundo.—grandi polenta: 'mighty messes of porridge;' coarse, thick stuff (Maclean). 'Polenta, ἄλφιτα, "pearl barley," a Greek, not a Roman dish (PLIN., H. N., 18, 19, 28), mentioned as a simple article of diet by Attalus, SENECA'S preceptor (Ep., 110, 18)' (Conington, after Jahn).

56. Samios = Pythagorean, from Pythagoras of Samos. 'And the letter, which is disparted into Samian branches, has pointed out to you the steep path whose track is on the right.'—diduxit: as demanded by the sense against the MSS., which have deduxit.—littera: The letter Y, or rather its old form Ψ , was selected by Pythagoras to embody the immemorial image of the two paths (HESIOD, O. et D., 287-292), so familiar in the apologue of Hercules at the cross-roads (XEN., Comm., 2, 1, 20), and alluded to again by our author, 5, 34. Hence this letter was called the Pythagorean; AUSON., Id., 12, de litt. monos., 9: Pythagoaræ bivium ramis patet ambiguus Y (comp. also Id., 15, 1: quod vitae sectabor iter?) Hence the rami Samii above. 'The stem stands for the unconscious life of infancy and childhood, the diverging branches for the alternative offered to the youth, virtue or vice' (Conington).

57. surgentem: The path to the right is the surgens callis of PERSIUS, the ὄρθιος ὁῖμος of HESIOD. The character itself points upward, and the right-hand path is a clear-cut line (limes), so that there is no mistaking the road, unless you are bent on following Shakspeare's 'primrose path of dalliance,' instead of 'the steep and thorny path to heaven.'

131

58. stertis adhuc: The preacher finds his audience still snoring, despite his eloquence. As stertis can not be divorced from what follows, it is better to take it as an exclamation than as a rhetorical question.—laxumque caput, etc.: 'Your head a-lolling with its coupling loose, yawns a yawn of yesterday with jaws unhinged at every point.' The head is laxum on account of its weight. Comp. καρηβαρεῖν ALCIPH., 3, 32, and MENAND., fr. 67 (4, 88 Mein.).

59. oscitat hesternum: 'Yawning off yesterday' (Conington); the yawn is yesterday's yawn, because it comes from yesterday's debauch, ALEXIS, fr. 277 (3, 515 Mein.).—undique: 'from all points of the compass' (Conington), 'an intentional exaggeration for utraque parte.'—malis: Jahn's malis? (1843) is not good. The description is too minute for the interrogative form.

60. est aliquid: Ironical; hence the expectation of a negative answer is suppressed. G., 634, R. 1; A., 65, 2, a.—quo = in quod. Schlüter combines with tendis arcum.—in quod: The other reading, in quo, is unsatisfactorily defended by Hermann and Pretor.

61. 'A wild-geese chase' is the corresponding English expression for the Latin corvos sequi, the Greek τὰ πετόμενα διώκειν. 'Each word is carefully selected. Thus the chase is a random one (passim), the object worthless (corvos), the missile any thing that comes first to hand' (Pretor, after Jahn). Jahn refers further to AESCHYL., Ag., 394 (Dind.): διώκει παῖς ποταπὸν ὄρνυ. Familiar is EURIP.: ΠΤΗΝΑΣ ΔΙΩΚΕΙΣ, ὧ ΤΕΚΝΟΝ, ΤΑΣ ἘΛΠΙΔΑΣ.

62. ex tempore: 'for the moment,' 'at the beck of the moment,' 'by the rule of the moment' (Conington).

63-76. A general preachment begins. Wake up, you snorer. Wake up, all you snorers. You are all sick, or all threatened with sickness. Do not postpone the remedy until it is too late. That remedy is to be found in the principles of true wisdom; in other words, in the doctrines of the Stoic creed. Before the sermon is finished, the preacher notices an unfriendly stir in his audience, and is punching a member of his congregation when he is interrupted.

132

63. helleborum: The black hellebore this time (1, 51). The black was good for dropsy, PLIN., H. N., 25, 5, 22. It was the great 'purger of melancholy.'—cutis aegra tumebit: Comp. vv. 95, 98.—venienti occurrere morbo: Every one will remember the well-worn Ovidian Principiis obsta, R. A., 91. The comparison of moral with physical disease was a favorite topic with the Stoics, who overdid it, according to CIC., Tusc. Dis., 4, 10, 23.

64. poscentis: Elsewhere PERSIUS uses after video the less vivid Infinitive, 1, 19. 69; 3, 91. On the difference, see G., 527, R. 1; A., 72, 3, d. So after facio, 1, 44.

65. quid opus: G., 390, R.; A., 52, 3, a.—Cratero: More bookishness. Craterus was a famous physician of the time of CICERO. HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 161.—magnum promittere montis: A proverbial phrase, which survives in several modern languages: Fr. monts et merveilles; Germ. goldene Berge versprechen. Jahn compares TER., Phormio, 1, 2, 18: modo non montis auri pollicens; Heinr., SALL., Cat. 23: maria montis que polliceri coepit.

66. discite o: To remove the hiatus, Barth suggested io, Guyet vos. HOR., Od., 3, 14, 11: male ominatis, is not a parallel for the hiatus, even if the reading be correct, and the parallel in CATULL., 3, 16, is conjectural.—causas cognoscite rerum: Comp. VERG., Georg., 2, 490: Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas, and sapientia est rerum divinarum et humanarum causarumque scientia, CIC., Off., 2, 2, 5. On the connection of the different articles of this catechism, see Knickenberg, l.c. p. 35 seqq. Discite is the exhortation to the study of philosophy. Causas cognoscite rerum bids us pursue what the Stoics called Physic, for without a knowledge of nature there can be no knowledge of duty. Ethic is based on Physic; τέλος ἐστὶ τὸ ὁμολογουμένως τῆ φύσει ζῆν (STOB., Ecl., 2, 132). See Long's Antoninus, p. 56. The constitution of nature once understood, we shall know what we owe to God, what to ourselves, what to mankind, what things are good, what evil. Quid fas optare refers to our duty to God, quem te deus esse iussit to our duty to ourselves, patriae carisque propinquis to our duty to our neighbors. But nothing is more evident than the absence of any logical development. Comp. with the whole passage, SEN., Ep., 82, 6: sciat quo iturus sit, unde ortus, quod illi bonum, quod malum sit, quid petat, quid evitet, quae sit illa ratio quae appetenda ac fugienda discernat, qua cupiditatum mansuescit insania, timorum saevitia conpescitur.

133

67. quid sumus: The independent form with the Indicative is more lively; the regular dependent form with the Subjunctive comes in below, v. 71. G., 469, R. 1; A., 67, 2, d.—quidnam = quam vitam. G., 331, R. 2; A., 52, 3, a, N.—victuri: The use of the Participle in an interrogative clause is unnatural in English (G., 471). The future Participle of purpose is late or poetical (G., 673; A., 72, 4, a). ‘And what the life that we are born to lead.’—ordo: According to Heinr. and Jahn ordo is used with reference to the position in the chariot-race, so that the comparison begins here, and not at metae. SOPH., EL., 710: στάντες δ’ ἴν’ αὐτοὺς οἱ τεταγμένοι βραβεῖς | κλήροις ἔπηλαν καὶ κατέστησαν διφρους. But as τάξις (ordo) is a Stoic term, it is not unlikely that the use of the word suggested the figure, which came in as an after-thought. The Stoic preacher, as well as the Christian, finds it necessary to repeat himself in slightly different forms, and we must not look for a sharp distinction between ordo quis datus and humana qua parte locatus es in re, between quidnam victuri gignimur and quem te deus esse iussit.

68. quis = qui. So 1, 63. G., 105; A., 21, 1, a.—qua et unde: where (how) it lies and from what point to begin, ‘where to take it’ (Conington). Herm.’s quam is not so good.—metae flexus: ‘turn round the goal.’ The difficulty of rounding the goal in a chariot-race is notorious. See IL., 23, 306 foll.; SOPH., EL., 720 foll., and the commentators on PLATO, Io, 537. With the expression metae flexus Jahn comp. STAT., Theb., 6, 433: flexae—metae. Mollis, ‘gradual,’ ‘easy.’ So CAES., B. G., 5, 9: mollie litus, of a gently sloping shore.

69. quis modus argento: The Sixth Satire deals with a similar theme.—quid fas optare: the argument of the Second Satire.—asper nummus: ‘coin fresh from the mint,’ ‘rough from the die,’ Suet., Nero, 44. So Jahn. Others consider this distinction too subtle, and make a. n. simply equivalent to ‘coined silver,’ as opposed to ‘silver plate,’ argentum. Conington suggests the meaning, ‘What is the use of money hoarded up and not circulated (tritus)?’ Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 1, 41 foll., 73: nescis quo valeat nummus? quem praebeat usum?

70. carisque propinquis: HOR., Sat., 1, 1, 83.

72. locatus: ‘posted,’ τεταγμένος, ‘a military metaphor’ (ARRIAN, Diss., 1, 9, 16; M. ANTON., 11, 13).—humana re: ‘humanity,’ inter homines.

73. disce, nec invidias: sc. discere, according to Jahn. His te quoque iungere, Caesar | invideo, LUCAN., 2, 550, like φθουεῖν: μὴ φθόρει μοι ἀποκρίνασθαι τοῦτο, PLAT., Gorg., 489A. PERSIUS singles out one of his audience, who is tempted away from philosophy by his gains as an advocate. Others, less satisfactorily, suppose that the lawyer is outside of the congregation. On nec invidias, see 1, 7.—multa fidelia putet: ‘Many a jar of good things is spoiling;’ ‘The details are contemptuous. There is a coarseness in fees paid in kind’ (Conington). Comp. JUV., 7, 119.—pinguibus Umbris: ‘fat’ in every sense, in figure, in fortune, and in wit. In MART., 7, 53, an Umbrian sends by eight huge Syrian slaves a miscellaneous lot of presents, value 30 nummi—a proceeding due as much to stupidity as to stinginess (parcus Umber, CAT., 39, 11). The appearance of the Umbrians was not prepossessing, if we may judge by OVID’s portrait of an Umbrian dame (A. A., 3, 303-4).

75. et piper et pernae: The piper is not the Indian, but the inferior Italian (PLIN., H. N., 12, 7, 4; 16, 32, 59) (Meister). Pernae, a stock present. Comp. siccus petasunculus et vas | pelamydum, JUV., 7, 119. To supply putet with piper is not satisfactory, and we must take refuge in Zeugma. Pretor is for dropping v. 75, and sees in PERSIUS’S awkwardness traces of a duplex recensio, as in vv. 12-14.—Marsi: For the simplicity of the Marsians, Jahn compares JUV., 3, 169; 14, 180.

76. mena: ‘sprat,’ cheap sea-fish of some sort. ‘You have not yet come to the last sprat of the first barrel’ (Conington).—defecerit: As non quod more commonly takes the Subjunctive, the shifting to the Subjunctive from the Indicative, after nec invidias, is not strange. G., 541, R. 1; A., 66, 1, d, R.

77-85. The discourse is cut short by a military man, who, with the dogmatism of his class (vieux soldat, vieille bête), sets down all philosophers as a pack of noodles. The lines of the picture which he draws are familiar to every student of manners. ‘PERSIUS hates the military cordially (comp. 5, 189-191) as the most perfect specimens of developed animalism, and consequently most antipathetic to a philosopher. See Nisard, Études sur les Poètes Latins [1, 3^e éd. 273-277; Martha, Moralistes Romains, p. 141]. HORACE merely glances at the education their sons received, as contrasted with that given him by his father, in spite of narrow means, Sat., 1, 6, 72. JUVENAL has an entire satire on them (16), in which he complains of their growing power and exclusive privileges, but without any personal jealousy’ (Conington). PERSIUS is so bookish that I suspect Greek influence. Comp. κομψὸς στρατιώτης, οὐδ’ ἔαν πλάττη θεός, | οὐδεὶς γένουτ’ ἄν, MENAND., fr. 711 (4, 277 Mein.). See Introd., xx.

77. de gente: G., 371, R. 5; A., 50, 2, e, R. 1. Gente, ‘tribe,’ ‘crew.’—hircosa: ‘Rammish’ is not too strong, opposed to unguentatus in a fragment of SEN., ap. GELL., 12, 2, 11 (cited by Jahn). The unsavory soldier and the perfumed dandy are alike foes to the simplicity of the Stoic school. Your old soldier prided himself on his stench, as would appear from the dainty anecdote in PLUTARCH, Mor., 180C: ὁ βασιλεῦ, θάρρει καὶ μὴ φοβοῦ τὸ πλήθος τῶν πολεμίων, αὐτὸν γὰρ ἡμῶν τὸν γράσον οὐχ ὑπομενοῦσι.—centurionum: The rank is higher, but the intellectual level is that of the typical German Wachtmeister.

78. Quod sapio satis est mihi: Jahn (1868); Quod satis est sapio mihi, Jahn (1843), Herm. With the latter reading the words quod satis est = satis must be taken together, and a little more stress is laid on mihi. The general sense is the same. Comp. PLATO, Phaedr., 242C: ὡςπερ οἱ τὰ γράμματα φαῦλοι ὅσον ἐμαυτῶ μόνον ἱκανός, with a very different tone.—non ego: ‘no—not I.’ See 1, 45.—curo: ‘care,’ i.e., ‘want.’ See 2, 18.

79. Arcesilas: Arcesilaus, the founder of the New Academy, flourished about 300 B.C. His great advance on Socrates was his knowing that he did not even know that he knew nothing, Cic., Acad., 1, 12, 45. Solon flourished about 600 B.C. Our hircose friend is made to jumble his samples.—aerumnosi Solones: Notice the contemptuous use of the Plural. Aerumnosus, κακοδαίμων, ‘God-forsaken,’ ‘poor devil,’ is a strange epithet for Solon, but we have to do with an ignoramus and a jolter-head.

80. obstipo capite: ‘with stooped head,’ ‘bent forward,’ κεκυφότες, HOR., Sat., 2, 5, 92: Davus sis comicus atque | stes capite obstipo, multum similis metuenti. Comp. the description of Ulysses in Il., 3, 217 foll.—figentes lumine terram: Jahn quotes a parallel from STAT., Silv., 5, 1, 140. More common forms are figere lumina terra, in humo, in terram. ‘They bore the ground with their eyes,’ ‘look at it as if they would look through it.’ Casaubon comp. PLAT., Alcib. II., 138A. Add LUCIAN, Vit. Auct., 7; ARISTAENET., 1, 15.

81. murmura: Imitated by AUSEN., Id., 17, 24: murmure concluso rabiosa silentia rodunt.—rabiosa: ‘Mad dogs do not bark.’—silentia: Poetic Plural; very common.—rodunt: ‘biting the lips and grinding the teeth.’ ‘Whether murmura and silentia are Accusatives of the object, or cognates, is not clear’ (Conington). ‘Chewing the cud of mumbled words and mad-dog silence’ is very much in the vein of PERSIUS. Comp. rarus sermo illis et magna libido tacendi, JUV., 2, 14.

82. exporrecto trutinantur: The lips are thrust out (a sign of deep thought) and quiver like a balance; hence they are said ‘to poise their words upon the quivering balance of a thrust-out lip’—a caricature of the simple figure ponderare verba. Jahn compares LUC., Hermot., 1, 1: καὶ τὰ χεῖλη διεσάλευεσ ἡρέμα ὑποτονθορούζων; and Casaubon, ARISTAEN., 2, 3: ἡρέμα τῶ χεῖλη κινεῖ καὶ ἄττα δήπου πρὸς ἑαυτὸν ψιθυρίζει.

83. aegroti veteris: The aegri somnia of HOR., A. P., 7. AS USUAL, PERSIUS exaggerates, and makes the sick man (aegroti) a dotard to boot (veteris). Jahn understands, ‘a confirmed invalid.’ Comp. JUV., 9, 16: aegri veteris quem tempore longo | torret quarta dies, etc.—gigni | de nihilo nihilum: The cardinal doctrine of Epicurus (LUCR., 1, 150), but not confined to him.

85. hoc est quod palles: G., 331, R. 2; A., 52, 1, b. Comp. 1, 124. The Cognate Accusative is susceptible of a great variety of translations. ‘Is this the stuff that you get pale on?’ (Pretor). ‘Is this what makes you pale?’—prandeat: The prandium, originally a military meal, was dear to the military stomach. Comp. impransi correptus voce magistri, HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 257.

86. his: Abl. Conington makes it a Dative, and cites an evident Abl. to prove it, VERG., Aen., 4, 128. Jahn comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 8, 83: ridetur fictis rerum.—multum: with torosa, according to Jahn.

87. Conington notices the grandiloquence of the line. ‘Cloth of frize’ is often ‘matched’ with ‘cloth of gold’ in PERSIUS.—naso crispante: ‘curling nostrils.’ The mob laughs, the soldiers snicker. The listening rabble is frankly amused. The crew to which the centurion belongs sneer too much to laugh out. Or perhaps the poet makes the distinction between the general ridere (γελάω) and the mocking laughter of cachinnare (καγχάζειν).

88-106. It is strange, as Pretor observes, that the sudden change introduced by this line should not have been noticed by the commentators. With a more mature artist there would be a suspicion of dislocation. As it is, the unity of the Satire would gain by omitting 66-87. PERSIUS composed slowly, and we find here as elsewhere traces of piecemeal work.

The preacher takes up his parable. A man feels sick, consults a physician, lies by; is more comfortable, takes a fancy to a bath and a draught of wine. He meets a friend, perhaps his medical friend, on the way. ‘My dear fellow, you are pale as a ghost.’—‘Pshaw!’—‘Look out! You are yellow as saffron, and bless me! if you are not swelling.’—‘Pale? Why, you are paler than I am. Don’t come the guardian over me. My guardian has been dead a year and a day.’—‘Go ahead, I’m mum.’—He goes ahead, stuffs himself, takes his bath. While he is drinking a chill strikes him, and he is a dead man. No expense spared on the funeral. ‘You can’t mean that for me,’ says a literalist. ‘If I’m sick, you are another. I have no fever, no ague.’ Nay, but you are subject to the worst of diseases—to the fever of covetousness, the fever of lust, to daintiness with its sore mouth, to fear with its cold chill, and, worse than all, to the raging delirium of anger.

88. inspice: ἐπίσκεψαι, a medical term. Comp. PLAUT., Pers., 2, 5, 15.—nescio quid: G., 469, R. 2; A., 67, 2, e. Quid is the Accusative of the Inner Object. ‘I have a strange fluttering at my heart.’—aegrus: ‘out of order.’ As aegrus is emphatic, co-ordinate in English. There is ‘something wrong about my throat and—’

89. exsuperat: Neuter. Comp. exsuperant flammae, VERG., Aen., 2, 759.—gravis: ‘foul.’ So OV., A. A., 3, 277: gravis oris odor.—sodes: The original form is commonly supposed to be si audes (saudes), PLAUT., Trin., 2, 1, 18; from audeo (comp. avidus), ‘if you have the heart,’ ‘an thou wilt,’ A., 35, 2, a. Others put sodes under SA (pron.), as akin to sodalis, and comp. ἡθεῖος, ‘own dear friend,’ ‘mon cher.’ See Vaniček, Lat. Etym. Wb., S. 165. Sodes = socius is an old tradition.

90. requiescere: ‘keep quiet.’—postquam vidit: with a causal shade. See 5, 88; 6,10, and G., 567; A., 62, 2, e.

91. tertia nox: The patient thinks that he has the more common semitertian, whereas he has the quartan. When the third night comes without a chill, he fancies that he is safe.

92. de maiore domo: The 'great house' is clearly that of a rich friend, rather than that of a large dealer. Casaubon compares JUV., 5, 32: cardiaco numquam cyathum, missurus amico.—modice sitiente lagoena: Thirst and capacity are near akin; a flagon of moderate thirst is a flagon 'of moderate swallow,' as Conington renders it. The personification of the flagon is old and not uncommon. See the humorous epigram, ANTHOL. PAL., 5, 135.

93. lenia Surrentina: Lenia is either 'mild' or 'mellow.' The Surrentine was a light wine often recommended to invalids, PLIN., H. N., 14, 6, 8; 23, 1, 20.—loturo: He asks before bathing; he drinks after bathing. For the custom Jahn compares SEN., Ep., 122, 6.—rogabit: So Jahn (1868) and Hermann. Jahn (1843) reads rogavit, like the Greek Aorist in descriptions. The Future makes it more distinctly a supposed case.

94. videas: rather optative than imperative in its tone.

95. surgit: 'is swelling,' 'getting bloated.'—tacite: 'insensibly' (Conington).—pellis: 'hide.' Comp. JUV., 10, 192: deformem pro cute pelle m.

96. At tu deterius: Le trait est comique. Ce serait de la gaieté, si Perse savait rire, Nisard.—ne sis mihi tutor, etc.: Proverbial. So HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 88: ne sis patruus mihi.

97. iam pridem sepeli: Comp. Omnes composui. Felices! Nunc ego resto, HOR., Sat., 1, 9, 28. Sepeli for sepelii (sepelivī), a rare contraction.—turgidus his epulis: HOR., Ep., 1, 6, 61: crudi tumidi que lavemur, and comp. JUV., 1, 142 seqq: paena tamen praesens, cum tu deponis amictus | turgidus et crudum pavonem in balnea portas | hinc subitae mortes atque intestata senectus.—hic: 'our man.'—albo ventre: Turgidus epulis is one feature, albo ventre another. Ventre does not depend on turgidus. The color (λευκός) is a sign of weakness and sickness. The swollen belly makes a ghastly show.—lavatur: 'takes his bath.' Comp. G., 209; A., 39, c, N.

99. sulphureas mefitis: Mefitis is originally the vapor from sulphur-water; hence the propriety of the epithet sulphureas.

100. calidum triental: The wine was heated to bring out the sweat. Bibere et sudare vita cardiaca est, SEN., Ep., 15, 3.—triental: restored by Jahn (1843) for trientem, to which he returned in 1868. Triens is the measure, $\frac{1}{3}$ sextarius, triental would be the vessel. Comp. with this passage LUCIL., 28, 39-40 (L. M.): ad cui? quem febris una atque una ἀπειρία | vini inquam cyathus unus potuit tollere.

101. crepuere: Vivid Aorist, not a simple return to the narrative form. Comp. 5, 187. For the Greek, which PERSIUS imitates, see Kühner, Ausf. Gramm. (2te Ausg.), 2, 138.—relecti: He shows his teeth when he chatters.

102. uncta: Remember the large use of oil in Italian cookery.—cadunt = vomuntur, but there is a certain helplessness in cadunt.—pulmentaria: originally ὄψον, 'relish,' afterward 'dainties.' See the Dictionaries.

103. hinc: 'hereupon.'—tuba: Trumpets announced the death, and trumpets were sounded at the funeral. See HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 42.—candelae = cerei, 'wax lights,' supposed by Jahn and others to have been used chiefly when the death was sudden, on the basis of SEN., Tranq., 11, 7.—tandem: 'After all the preliminary performances' (Maclean).—beatulus: μακαρίτης. Jahn cites AMM. MARCELL., 25, 3: quem cum beatum fuisse Sallustius respondisset praefectus, intellexit occisum. 'The dear departed' (Conington). 'Our sainted friend.'—alto: A mark of a first-class funeral.

104. conpositus: 'laid out.' 'By foreign hands thy decent limbs composed,' POPE.—crassis lutatus amomis: Every word is contemptuous: 'bedaubed with lots of coarse ointments.' The Plural amoma indicates the cheap display. With crassis, comp. HOR., A. P., 375: crassum unguentum; with amomis, JUV., 4, 108: amomo | quantum vix redolent duo funera.

105. in portam: A custom at least as old as HOMER, Il., 19, 212. Porta here = ianua, fores, but 'nowhere else' (Maclean).—rigidas: The gender of calx is unsteady. See Neue, Formenlehre, 1, 694.

106. hesterni Quirites: 'Citizens of twenty-four hours' standing' (Conington); slaves left free by him. Hence capite induto, with the pilleus 'cap of liberty' on. The winding up of the man reminds one of PETRON., 42: bene elatus est, planctus est optime, manumisit aliquot.

107. PERSIUS hauls out his man-of-straw, his souffre-douleur, and makes him talk.—Tange venas: 'Feel my pulse,' the regular expression, as in SEN., Ep., 22, 1: vena tangenda est.—miser: Comp. v. 15. 'You're another!' 'Poor creature yourself' (Conington).—pone in pectore dextram: If you are not satisfied with my pulse, put your hand on my heart.

108. nil calet hic: After some hesitation, I have given the whole passage from Tange miser to non frigent to one person, who anticipates the verdict of the monitor by nil calet hic and non frigent. 'You must admit that my heart is not hot nor my feet cold.' At the same time the very clearness is an objection.

109. Visa est si forte: On the form of the conditional, see G., 569; A., 59, 2, b. On the obvious thought, see 2, 52 foll.; 4, 47.

111. rite: 'regularly.'—positum est: 'served up.'

112. durum holus: 'tough cabbage,' 'half boiled' (Pretor).—populi (= plebis) cribro: 'A coarse, common sieve.' Hence p. c. decussa farina, 'coarse-bolted flour,' the panis secundus of HORACE, Ep., 2, 1, 123, the 'seconds' of the modern miller. The ancients were very dainty in this article.

The parasite in ALCIPHON (1, 21, 2) expresses his disgust at the ἄρτος ὁ ἐξ ἀγοράς.

114. putre quod haud deceat: The Relative with the Subjunctive is parallel with the Adjective. G., 439, R. Comp. 1, 14. Haud deceat, 'it won't do,' 'it won't answer.'—plebeia beta: The beet is a vulgar vegetable, MART., 13, 13 (Jahn). The irony is evident, as the beet is proverbially tender. See Dictionaries, s.v. betizare.

115. excussit: Excutere aristas seems to be a vulgar expression, like the English 'raise a goose-skin, goose-flesh, duck-flesh.'—aristas = pilos. Jahn refers to VARRO, L. L., 6, 49.—timor albus: See note on Prol., 4.

141

116. face supposita: The heart is the caldron and passion the fire-brand.

118. Orestes: the typical madman.

FOURTH SATIRE.

THE theme of this Satire is contained in the closing verses. It is the Apollinic γνώθι σαυτόν. Want of self-knowledge is the fault which is scourged. The basis is furnished by the Platonic dialogue, known as the First Alcibiades, and the characters are the same. The person lectured under the mask of Alcibiades is a young Roman noble, in whom commentators of a certain school have recognized the familiar features of Nero.

ARGUMENT.—Socrates is supposed to be addressing Alcibiades. You undertake to engage in politics? You rely on your genius, do you? What do you know of the norms of right and wrong, you callow youngster? What do you know of the subtle distinctions of casuistry, that you undertake to say what is just and what is unjust? You have a goodly outside, but that is all, and you are fitter for a course of hellebore than for a career of statesmanship. What is your end and aim in life? Dainty dishes and basking in the sunshine? The first old crone you meet has the same exalted ideal. Or do you boast of your descent? You praise your lineage, you trumpet forth your beauty, just as yon market-woman cries up her greens (1-22).

You do not know yourself. Who knows himself? Every one sees his neighbor's faults, no one his own. You sneer at the curmudgeon who groans out a health over the sour stuff he gives his laborers on a holiday (23-32). And while you make mock at him, some fellow, who is standing at your side, nudges you with his elbow, and tells you that you are as bad as he, though in another way (33-41). And so we give and take punishment. This is our plan of life. We hide our faults from ourselves. We get testimonials from our neighbors to impose on our own consciences. Awake to righteousness! Put your goodness to the test! If you yield to the temptation of covetousness, of lust, in vain will you drink in the praises of the rabble. Reject what you are not. Let Rag, Tag, and Bobtail take away their tributes. Live with yourself, and you will find out how scanty is your moral furniture (42-52).

Jahn regards this Satire as the earliest of the six, and it certainly shows even greater immaturity than the others. The well-known individuality of Socrates is coarsely handled, the irony lacks the subtle play, the mischievous good-nature of the great Athenian; and though the glaring anachronisms may be defended by such exemplars as HORACE (notably in Sat., 2, 5), there is all the difference in the world between the sly humor of the older poet, who peeps from behind the Greek mask and winks at the Roman audience, and the grim contortions of the beardless representative of the bearded master.

142

The indecency of a part of the Satire is considered by Teuffel a valid objection to the view taken by Jahn, but the imagination of early youth and the experience of corrupt old age often meet in disgusting detail, and the obscenities of bookish men are among the worst in literature. Add to this the peculiar views of the Stoic school as to the corruption of the flesh (2, 63), and the consequent Stoic tendency to degrade the body by the most contemptuous representations of physical functions, and we can the more readily understand how MARCUS ANTONINUS, the purest character of his time, should have besmirched his Meditations with passages which lack a parallel for their crudity; and why PERSIUS, the poet of virginal life, should have outdone the praegrans senex of Attic comedy in the coarseness of his expressions.

1-22. Socrates exposes the incompetence of Alcibiades for affairs of state, his lack of ethical training, his need of a just balance, his grovelling views of life, his puerile pride in his ancient family and in his handsome face. Socrates and Alcibiades were contrasts so tempting that dialogues between them were favorite philosophical exercises.

1. rem populi = rem publicam.—tractas? On the form of the question, see G., 455; A., 71, 1, R. Comp. PLATO, Alc. I., p. 106C: διανοεῖ γὰρ παριέναι συμβουλευέσων Ἀθηναίους ἐντὸς οὐ πολλοῦ χρόνου, and further, p. 118B, and Conv., p. 216A.—barbatum: The beard was the conventional mark of the philosopher in the time of PERSIUS; it is an anachronism in the case of Socrates, who lived before shaving was the rule and the beard a badge. However, the custom was old in PERSIUS'S day, and the slip is slight. So Plato's long beard is noticed by EPHIPPIUS ap. ATHEN., 11, p. 509C (3, 332 Mein.). Comp. JUV., 14, 12: barbatus—magistros.—crede: advertises a want of art.

2. sorbitio: 'draught,' 'dose.' So SEN., E. M., 78, 25.—tollit = sustulit. A solitary Historical Present with a relative is harsh to us for all the examples and all the commentators.

3. quo fretus? See 3, 67. Comp. PLATO, Alc. I., p. 123E: τί οὖν ποτ' ἔστιν ὅτω πιστεύει τὸ μείρακιον.—magni pupille Pericli: Because Alcibiades owed his start in life to his guardian and kinsman Pericles. See PLAT., l.c. p. 104B. For the form Pericli, see G., 72; A., 11, I., 4.

143

4. scilicet: Ironical, 1, 15; 2, 19. 'Of course.' Comp. the old 'God wot.'—ingenium et rerum prudentia: 'wit and wisdom.' Prudentia may be translated 'knowledge,' and rerum 'world,' 'life,' but not necessarily. See 1, 1.—velox: Predicative (Schol.), ‘have been quick in coming’ (Conington).

5. ante pilos: ‘before your beard.’ A contrast with barbatum magistrum’ (Conington), but b. can hardly be used in the same breath as the mark of mature years and as the ensign of a philosopher.—venit: On the number, see G., 281, Exc. 2; A., 49, 1, b.—dicenda tacendaque: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 7, 72—dicenda tacenda locutus—for the expression. For the sense, Conington comp. AESCHYLUS, Cho., 582: σιγαῖν ὅπου δεῖ καὶ λέγειν τὰ καίρια. In HORACE it means ‘all sorts of things;’ here, ‘what you must say, what leave unsaid.’

6. commota fervet bile: Comp. HOR., Od., 1, 13, 4: fervens difficili bile tumet iecur.

7. fert animus: Well-known phrase of Ov., Met., 1, 1. So in Greek, φέρει ὁ νοῦς, ἡ γνώμη, ἡ φρήν. The verse has a stately irony, and should have a stately translation. ‘The spirit moves you’ (Pretor) is degraded to slang. ‘Your bosom’s lord biddeth you wave a hush profound.’—fecisse: Comp. 1, 91.—silentia: Comp. 3, 81.

8. maiestate manus: ‘with majestic hand’. (G., 357, R. 2), ‘by the imposing action of your hand’ (Conington).—quid deinde loquere? The orator has not considered his speech. ‘Now that you have got your silence, what have you got to say.’—Quirites: PERSIUS drops his Greek. Alcibiades is a mere quintain.

9. puta: ‘put case,’ ‘say,’ ‘for instance,’ is an iambic Imperative, with the ultimate shortened, like cavē, vidē, etc., 1, 108. Hermann gives it to Socrates, which is favored by the sense; Jahn and others to Alcibiades, as caricatured by Socrates, which is favored by the position. Heinrich reads puto.

10. scis etenim, etc.: and (well you may) for you know how, etc. On scis, see 1, 53; on etenim, 3, 48. Comp. PLATO, l.c. 110C: ῥου ἄρα ἐπίστασθαι καὶ παῖς ὢν, ὡς ἔοικε, τὰ δίκαια καὶ τὰ ἄδικοα. It may be necessary to observe that all this is sarcasm. Conington takes it literally, and considers these statements as so many concessions.—gemina lance = geminis lancibus. Comp. Ov., A. A., 2, 644: geminus pes.

11. ancipitis: ‘wavering.’—rectum discernis: ‘You can distinguish the straight line when it runs among crooked lines on either hand—ay, even when your square with twisted leg is but a faulty guide.’ The straight line is virtue, the crooked lines are vices. The difficulty of picking out the right course is much enhanced when the rule by which we go is itself warped—that is, ‘as Casaubon explains it, when justice has to be corrected by equity.’ The regula here is not the regula of 5, 38, but the norma, or carpenter’s square.

13. potis es: See 1, 56.—theta: Θ, the initial of θάνατος, was the mark of condemnation used in the time of PERSIUS, instead of the older C (condemno). It was also employed in epitaphs, in army lists, and the like, for ‘deceased.’ Translate ‘black mark.’

14. quin desinis: See 2, 71.—tu: The elision of the monosyllable is harsh (Jahn). See 1, 51. 66. 131.—igitur: ‘If all this is so, why then—.’ Comp. the indignant igitur (εἴτα) of 1, 98.—summa pelle decorus: HOR. Ep., 1, 16, 45: Introrsus turpem, speciosum pelle decora.—neququam: ‘because you can not impose on me.’ Comp. 3, 30 (Conington).

15. ante diem: ‘before your time.’—blando caudam iactare popello: Casaubon thinks that a peacock is meant, Jahn suggests a horse. The Scholiast says that the image is that of a (pet) dog. Pelle decorus would not apply to the peacock, nor very well to the horse. It does apply to Alcibiades as the lion’s whelp of ARISTOPH., Ran., 1431. Comp. the famous description in AESCHYL., Agam., 725 (Dindorf). The comparison of politicians with lions is found also in PLATO, Gorg., 483E. The only difficulty lies in blando popello, but petting implies blanditiae on both sides. ‘The dog fawns on those who caress him’ (Conington).—popello: contemptuously, 6, 50; HOR., Ep., 1, 7, 65.

16. Anticyras: There were two towns of that name, one on the Maliac Gulf, the other in Phocis; both famous for their hellebore, but especially the latter. The town for its product, after the pattern of HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 83; A. P., 300 (Jahn). The Plural is the familiar poetic exaggerative.—meracas: ‘undiluted,’ ‘without a drop of water.’ HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 137: expulit helleboro morbum bilemque meraco. On the use of hellebore as a preparative for philosophy, comp. the well-known experience of Chrysippus: οὐ θέμις γενέσθαι σοφόν, ἢν μὴ τρὶς ἐφεξῆς τοῦ ἐλλεβόρου πιῆς, LUCIAN, Vit. Auct., 23 (1, 564 R.).—melior sorbere = qui melius sorberes (comp. quo graves Persae melius perirent, HOR., Od., 1, 2, 22).

17. summa boni = summum bonum.—uncta patella: ‘rich dishes.’ Comp. 3, 102. The reference to a sacrificial dish (3, 26) is less likely. As the character of Alcibiades is not kept up with any care by PERSIUS, it is hardly worth while to note that he was a most sensitive gourmet, as is shown by the curious anecdote, TELES ap. STOB., Flor., 5, 67.—vixisse: The Perfect with intention. G., 275, 1; A., 58, 11, e. ‘To have the satisfaction of having lived on the daintiest fare,’ so that you may say when you come to die, vixi dum vixi bene. Comp. SEN., Ep., 23, 10: Id agendum est ut satis vixerimus.

18. curata cuticula sole: with reference to the apricatio or insolatio. Comp. JUV., 11, 203: nostra bibit vernum contracta cuticula solem. What was a matter of hygiene became a matter of luxury. The sun-cure has been revived of late years. Curare cuticulam, cutem, pelliculam is commonly used of ‘good living’ generally, ‘taking very good care of one’s dear little self.’ See HOR., Ep., 1, 2, 29. 4, 15; Sat., 2, 5, 38; JUV., 2, 105.—haec: δεικτικῶς.—i nunc: ‘Irridentis vel exprobrantis formula,’ Jahn, who gives an overwhelming list of examples (comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 6, 17; 2, 3, 76). The usage requires it to be connected with suffla. ‘Go on, then, and blow as you have been blowing.' Suffla in this sense is quite as 'low' as our Americanism. PERSIUS has the aristocrat's contempt for superfine language, and by a natural reaction falls, not unfrequently, into slang. Jahn compares 5, 13 and 3, 27, and the Greek proverbial expression $\phi\upsilon\sigma\tilde{\alpha}\ \gamma\alpha\rho\ \omicron\upsilon\ \sigma\mu\kappa\rho\iota\sigma\iota\nu\ \alpha\upsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\kappa\omicron\iota\varsigma\ \xi\pi\iota$. Add MENAND., fr. 296 (4, 157 Mein.): $\omicron\iota\iota\ \lambda\alpha\lambda\omicron\upsilon\mu\epsilon\nu\ \omicron\upsilon\tau\epsilon\varsigma\ \omicron\iota\ \tau\rho\iota\sigma\acute{\alpha}\theta\lambda\omicron\iota\iota\ \mid\ \acute{\alpha}\pi\alpha\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma\ \omicron\iota\ \phi\upsilon\sigma\tilde{\omega}\nu\tau\epsilon\varsigma\ \acute{\epsilon}\phi\ \acute{\epsilon}\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\varsigma\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\gamma\alpha$. 'Mouth it out' (Conington), 'spout it out' (Maclean).

20. Dinomaches: The mother of Alcibiades came of the great house of the Alcmaeonidae, and it was to her that he owed his connection with Pericles. The Gen. without filius (G., 360, R. 3; A., 50, 1, b) is rare in the predicate.—candidus = pulcher. Comp. 3, 110. The beauty of Alcibiades is well known, PLAT., l.c. p. 104A.—esto: $\acute{\epsilon}\tilde{\iota}\epsilon\nu$; an ironical concession.

21. dum ne: Comp. G., 575; A., 61, 3. Final sentences are often elliptical (comp. note on 1, 4). 'Only you must admit that,' etc.; 'dum ne neget deterius sapere.'—pannuccia: Here not 'ragged,' but 'shrivelled.' Comp. MART., 11, 46, 3.—Baucis: The name is copied from the Baucis of OVID, Met., 8, 640, the wife of Philemon, the Joan of the antique Darby; a poor woman, who had a patch of vegetables. The anicula quae agreste holus vendebat, in PETRON., 6, is a similar figure.

22. bene: with discincto, according to Jahn, who compares bene mirae, 1, 111. Mr. Pretor says that if thus combined, 'bene is weak and adds nothing to the picture.' He forgets that there is such a thing as being male discinctus. Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 2, 132: discincta tunica fugiendum est ac pede nudo. If bene is combined with cantaverit, it must be used in its mercantile sense with vendere, cantare being equivalent to cantando vendere. 'When she has cried off her herbs at a good figure.'—discincto vernae: Verna, of itself a synonym for all that is saucy and pert, is heightened by discinctus, for which see 3, 31.—ocima: 'basil,' 'water-cress,' or what not, stands for 'greens' generally. Jahn thinks that it was an aphrodisiac, referring to EUBUL., fr. 53 (3, 229 Mein.). PERSIUS, as we have seen, delights in picturesque detail, and his comparisons must not be pressed. Alcibiades cries his wares, just as the herb-seller cries hers. So the 'apple-woman' or 'orange-girl' in modern times might be selected as the standard of a rising politician, hawking his wares from hustings to hustings, from stump to stump. The far-fetched interpretation that ocima cantare = convicia ingerere, because, as PLINY tells us (19, 7), 'basil is to be sown with curses,' may be mentioned as a specimen of the way in which the text of our author has been smothered by learning.

23-41. The satire becomes more general. No one tries to know his own faults; each has his eyes fixed on his neighbor's short-comings. Take some rich skinflint, and, as soon as he is mentioned, the details of his meanness will be spread before us. And yet you are as great a sinner in a different direction. Comp. M. ANTON., 7, 71: $\gamma\epsilon\lambda\omicron\iota\omicron\nu\ \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\iota\ \tau\eta\nu\ \mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu\ \iota\delta\iota\alpha\nu\ \kappa\alpha\kappa\iota\alpha\nu\ \mu\grave{\eta}\ \phi\epsilon\upsilon\gamma\epsilon\iota\nu\ \delta\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \delta\upsilon\nu\alpha\tau\omicron\nu\ \acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\iota$, $\tau\eta\nu\ \delta\acute{\epsilon}\ \tau\omicron\nu\nu\ \acute{\alpha}\lambda\lambda\omega\nu\ \phi\epsilon\upsilon\gamma\epsilon\iota\nu\ \omicron\pi\epsilon\rho\ \acute{\alpha}\delta\upsilon\nu\alpha\tau\omicron\nu$.

23. Ut: how.—in sese descendere: 'go down into his own heart.' The thought is simply noscere se ipsum. The heart is a depth, a well, a cellar, a sea. This is not the recede in te ipsum quantum potes of SEN., Ep., 7, 8. Comp. M. ANTON., 4, 3. Still less is it Mr. Pretor's 'enter the lists against yourself,' which would make 'self' at once the arena and the antagonist.

24. spectatur: The positive (quisque) must be supplied from the preceding negative. Comp. G., 446, R.; M., 462 b.—mantica: According to the familiar fable of Aesop (PHAEDR., 4, 10), each man carries two wallets. The one which holds his own faults is carried on his back; the other, which contains his neighbor's, hangs down over his breast. Comp. CATULL., 22, 21: sed non videmus manticae quod in tergo est. PERSIUS reduces the two wallets to one. Each man's knapsack of faults is open to the inspection of all save himself.

25. quaesieris: G., 250; A., 60, 2, b; $\xi\rho\omicron\upsilon\tau\ \acute{\alpha}\nu\ \tau\iota\varsigma$. PERSIUS gets away from Socrates and Alcibiades into a land of shadowy second persons. One of these is supposed to ask another whether he knows a certain estate. The casual question leads to a caustic characteristic of the owner, which is interrupted by another indefinite character, who quotes an ignotus aliquis, and the general impression at the close is that every body is violently preached at except the son of Dinomache, with whom we started.—Vettidi: With the characteristic of Vettidius, comp. HORACE'S Avidienus (cui canis cognomen, Sat., 2, 2, 55), and the $\acute{\alpha}\nu\epsilon\lambda\acute{\epsilon}\upsilon\theta\epsilon\rho\omicron\varsigma$ and the $\mu\kappa\rho\lambda\omicron\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ of THEOPHRASTUS.

26. Curibus: in the land of the Sabines, the land of frugal habits. Comp. 6, 1.—miluus errat: So Jahn (1868). Miluus is trisyllabic, as in HOR., Epod., 16, 31. Hermann, oberrat; Jahn (1843), oberret. The expression is proverbial: quantum milvi volant, PETRON., 37. Comp. JUV., 9, 55.

27. dis iratis genioque sinistro: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 8: iratis natus paries dis atque poetis. A substantive expression of quality without a common noun is rare in Latin as in English (M., 287, Obs. 3), but not limited in time. See Dräger, Histor. Syntax, § 226. 'The aversion of the gods and at war with his genius,' his 'second self,' who 'delights in good living,' quia genius laute vivendo gaudere putabatur (Jahn).

28. quandoque = quandocumque, as HOR., Od., 4, 1, 17, 2, 34.—pertusa = pervia, according to Jahn; 'roads and thoroughfares' (Conington); = calcata, trita, Heinr., which seems more natural.—compita: 'The compitalia is meant. Comp. CATO, R. R., 5, 4: Rem divinam nisi compitalibus in compito [vilicus] ne faciat. It was one of the feriae conceptivae, held in honor of the Lares compitales on or about the 2d of January. It is said to have been instituted by Servius Tullius, and restored by Augustus (SUET., Aug., 31), and was observed with feasting. Comp. CATO, R. R., 5, 7, and uncta compitalia. ANTHOL. LAT., 2, 246, 27B. n. 105, 27M.' So Pretor, after Jahn. With compita comp. Greek $\pi\acute{\alpha}\tau\text{-}\omicron\varsigma$, path.—figit: The suspension of the yoke symbolizes the suspension of labor. The yoke stands for the plough as well, TIBULL., 2, 1, 5.

29. metuens deradere: See 1, 47. Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 4, 80: metuentis reddere soldum.—limum: ‘the dirt’ on the jar. Comp. sive gravis veteri craterae limus adhaesit, HOR., Sat., 2, 4, 80. The Scholiast understands ‘the seal.’

30. hoc bene sit: The formula in drinking a health. Comp. PLAUT., Pers., 5, 1, 20. Here used also as a kind of grace.—tunicatum | caepe: πολύλοπον κρόμμυον (Casaubon). Tunicatum caepe, ‘bulbous or coated onion,’ as opposed to the sectile porrum, or ‘chives’ (Pretor). It may be going too far to exclude epitheta ornantia from PERSIUS, but he certainly uses them sparingly. Tunicatum is commonly understood to mean ‘skin and all,’ as we say of a potato, ‘jacket and all.’ Comp. JUV., 14, 153: tunicam mihi malo lupini. But as the skin of an onion is not very ‘filling,’ and as tunica may be used in the sense of ‘coat’ or ‘layer,’ the slight change to tunicatim—‘layer by layer’—has suggested itself to me. It is not a whit more exaggerated than JUVENAL’S filaque sectivi numerata includere porri (14, 133).

31. farrata olla: ‘porridge pot of spelt,’ an every-day meal with others, holiday fare with these unfortunates, hence plaudentibus. The Abl. of Cause. Farratam ollam (Jahn [1843] and Hermann) may be defended by STAT., Silv., 5, 3, 140 (cited by Jahn): fratrem plausere Therapnae, but there is danger of the miser’s eating it.

149

32. pannosam: ‘mothery.’ Every word tells. It is not wine, but vinegar; it is not even good vinegar, but vinegar that is getting flat; it is not even clear vinegar, but the lees of vinegar; and not even honest lees, but mothery lees.—morientis: ‘Dying vinegar’ is not so familiar to us as ‘dead wines.’ Comp. MART., 1, 18, 8.—aceti: Comp. faece rubentis aceti, MART., 11, 56, 7.

33. Picture of a sensualist.—figas in cute solem: εἰληθερεῖν, ‘fix the sun in your skin,’ ‘let the sun’s rays pierce your skin,’ instead of bibere, combibere solem, JUV., 11, 203 (quoted above, v. 18), and MART., 10, 12, 7; or the more prosaic sole uti, MART., 1, 77, 4.

34. cubito tangat: an immemorial familiarity. Examples range from HOMER, Od., 14, 485 to ARISTAEN., 1, 19, 27. PERSIUS has in mind HOR., Sat., 2, 5, 42: nonne vides (aliquis cubito stantem prope tangens) inquiet, etc.

35. acre | despuat: ‘empty acrid spittle,’ sc. on you. Others read in mores with Jahn (1843). Jahn (1868) reads with Hermann, Hi mores. Of course it is impossible to analyze this spittle, which flows to the end of v. 41. See the Introduction to the Satire. ‘Persium,’ as QUINTILIAN says of HORACE, in quibusdam nolim interpretari (1, 8, 6). This is one of the passages that called down on our author the rebuke of that verecund gentleman Pierre Bayle: Les Satires de Perse sont dévergondées.

42-52. Such is life. We hit and are hit in turn. We disguise our faults—our vulnera vitae—even from ourselves, and appeal to that common jade, common fame, for a certificate of health. But temptation reveals the corruption within. You are guilty of avarice, lust, swindling, and the praises of the mob are of no moment. Be yourself. Examine yourself, and know how scantily furnished you are.

42. caedimus, etc.: HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 97: caedimur et totidem plagis consumimus hostem (Casaubon). The resemblance here, as often elsewhere, is merely verbal, as in HORACE ‘the passage of arms is a passage of compliments’ (Conington).—praebemus: ‘expose,’ ‘present.’

43. vivitur hoc pacto: Negatively expressed non aliter vivitur. In other words: haec est condicio vivendi, HOR., Sat., 2, 8, 65, which Casaubon compares. ‘These are the terms, this the rule of life.’—sic novimus = notum est (Jahn). ‘So we have learned it.’ ‘This is its lesson.’—ilia subter: G., 414, R. 3. The danger of the wound is well known.

150

44. caecum: ‘hidden.’—lato balteus auro: The baldric covered the groin, and was often ornamented with bosses of gold. Comp. VERG., Aen., 5, 312: lato quam circumplectitur auro | balteus. This broad gold belt is the symbol of wealth and rank.

45. ut mavis: Ironical. HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 21.—da verba: Comp. 3, 19.—decipe nervos: ‘cheat your muscle,’ ‘cheat yourself into the belief that you are sound;’ and certainly self-deception seems to be required by the context. Otherwise decipe nervos might be considered as equivalent to mentire robur, pro sano te iacta, sanum te finge.

47. non credam? G., 455; A., 71, 1, R.—inprobe: The inprobus is hard-headed as well as hard-hearted. Comp. plorantesque inproba natos—reliquit, JUV., 6, 86.

48. amarum: Jahn reads amorum in his ed. of 1843, but was sorry for it. In 1868 he reads amarum, and punctuates so as to throw it into the grave of the next line.

49. si puteal: A versus conclamatus (Jahn). The old explanation makes this passage refer to exorbitant usury. The puteal here meant is supposed to be the one mentioned by HOR., Sat., 2, 6, 13—the puteal Libonis, situated near the praetor’s tribunal, and on that account a favorite haunt of usurers, who would naturally have frequent occasion to appear in court. Comp. the poplar-tree, which was the rendezvous of a certain ‘ring’ of contractors in Athens, ANDOC., 1, 133. Local allusions of this kind are the despair of commentators; the puteal is, after all, as mysterious as a ‘corner’ to the uninitiated, and we can only gather that puteal flagellare is slang for some recondite swindling process, which required a certain amount of knowingness (hence cautus). Conington renders, ‘flog the exchange with many a stripe.’ We may Americanize by ‘clean out, thrash out Wall Street.’ The Neronians, Casaubon at their head, understand the passage as referring to Nero’s habit of going out at night in disguise and maltreating people in the street—see TAC., Ann., 13, 25; SUET., Nero, 26—and cautus is supposed to allude to the measures which he took for his personal safety.

151

50. bibulas donaveris aures: The student is by this time familiar with PERSIUS'S way of hammering a familiar figure into odd shapes. If ears drink in, then ears are thirsty; if they are thirsty, then they tipple; and if you can give ear, you can bestow ears. 'In vain would you have given up your thirsty ears to be drenched by the praises of the mob.' Donaveris, Perf. Subj., μάτην παρεσχηκῶς ἄν εἶης τὰ ὦτα. Future ascertainment of a completed action. G., 271, 2.

51. cerdo: Κέρδων, a plebeian proper name. Conington translates by the 'Hob and Dick' of SHAKESPEARE'S Coriolanus. The common rendering, 'cobbler,' is a false inference from MART., 3, 59, 1; 99, 1.

52. tecum habita: Comp. 1, 7.—noris: The punctuation of all the editors makes noris an Imperative Subjunctive. Still a kind of condition is involved = si habites, noris. G., 594, 4; A., 60, 1, b. One of the most threadbare quotations from Latin poetry.

FIFTH SATIRE.

THE theme of the Fifth Satire is the Stoic doctrine of True Liberty. All men are slaves except the philosopher, and PERSIUS has learned to be a philosopher—thanks to Cornutus, to whom the Satire is addressed. Compare and contrast HORACE'S handling of a like subject in Sat., 2, 3. In Teuffel's commentary on his translation of this Satire, the matter is briefly summed up in these words: HORACE is an artist, PERSIUS a Preacher. See Introd., xxvi. Comp. also HOR., Sat., 2, 7, 46 seqq.

ARGUMENT.—PERSIUS speaks: Poets have a way of asking for a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues, whether the theme be tragedy or epic.—CORNUTUS: A hundred mouths, a hundred tongues! What do you want with them? Or, for that matter, with a hundred gullets either, to worry down the tragic diet which other poets affect. You do not pant like a bellows, nor croak like a jackdaw, nor strain your cheeks to bursting in the high epic fashion. Your language is to be the language of every-day life, to which you are to give an edge by skilful combination. Your utterance is modest, and your art is shown in rasping the unhealthy body of the age, and in impaling its faults with high-bred raillery. Be such your theme. Let others sup full with tragic horrors, if they will. Do you know nothing beyond the frugal luncheon of our daily food (1-18).

152

PERSIUS: It is not my aim to have my pages swollen with 'Bubbles from the Brunnen of Poesy.' We are alone, far from the madding crowd, and I may throw open my heart to you, for I would have you know how great a part of my soul you are. Knock at the walls of my heart, for you are skilful to distinguish the solid from the hollow, to tell the painted stucco of the tongue from the strong masonry of the soul. To this end I fain would ask—and ask until I get—a hundred voices, to show how deeply I have planted you in my heart of hearts; to tell you all that is past telling in my inmost being (19-29). When first the purple garb of boyhood withdrew its guardianship, and the amulet—no longer potent—was hung up, an offering to the old-fashioned household gods, when all about me humored me, and when the dress of manhood permitted my eyes to rove at will through the Subura with all its wares and wiles, what time the youth's path is doubtful, and bewilderment, ignorant of life, brings the excited mind to the spot where the great choice of roads is to be made—in that decisive hour I made myself son to you, and you took me, Cornutus, to your Socratic heart. Where my character was warped, the quiet application of the rule of right straightened what in me was crooked. My mind was constrained by reason, wrestled with its conqueror, and took on new features under your forming hand. How I remember the long days I spent with you, the first-fruits of the festal nights I plucked with you. Our work, our rest we ordered both alike, and the strain of study was eased by the pleasures of a modest table (30-44). Nay, never doubt that there is a harmony between our stars. Our constellation is the Balance or the Twins. The same aspect rules our nativities. Some star, be that star what it may, blends my fate with yours (45-51).

We are attuned each to other; but look abroad, and see how different men are from us and from each other. Each has his own aims in life. One is bent on active merchandise, one is given up to sluggish sleep, another is fond of athletic sports. One is drained dry by dicing, another by chambering and wantonness; but when the chalk-stones of gout rattle among their fingers and toes, they awake to the choke-damp and the foggy light in which they have spent their days, and mourn too late their wasted life (52-61).

But you delight to wax pale over nightly studies. A tiller of the human soul, you prepare the soil, and sow the field of the ear with the pure grain of Stoic wisdom. Hence seek, young and old, an aim for your higher being, provision for your hoary head (62-65).

'Hoary head, you say?' interposes an objector. 'That can be provided for as well to-morrow.' To-morrow! 'Next day the fatal precedent will plead.' Another to-morrow comes, and we have used up yesterday's to-morrow, and so our days are emptied one by one. To-morrow! It is always ahead of us, as the hind wheel can never overtake the front wheel, though both be in the self-same chariot (66-72).

153

The remedy for this and all the other ills of life is True Liberty—not such as gives a dole of musty meal, a soup-house ticket to the new-made citizen; not such as makes a tipsy slave free in the twinkling of an eye. Now Dama is a worthless groom, and would sell himself for a handful of provender. Anon he is set free, as you call it—becomes Marcus Dama. Excellent surety! Most excellent judge! If Marcus says it is so, it is so. Your sign and seal here, good Marcus. Pah! This is the liberty that manumission gives. Up speaks Marcus: 'Well! Who is free except the man that can do as he pleases? I can do as I please. Argal I am free as air.'—'Not so,' says your learned Stoic. 'Your logic is at fault. I grant the rest, but I demur to the clause "as you please."'—'The praetor's wand made me my own man. May I not do what I please, if I offend not against the statute-book?' (73-90).

'Do what you please!' cries PERSIUS, who identifies himself with the Stoic philosopher. 'Stop just there and learn of me; but first cease to be scornful, and let me get these old wives' notions out of your head. The praetor could not teach you any thing about the conduct of life with all its perplexities. As well expect a man to teach an elephant to dance the tight-rope. Reason bars the way, and whispers, "You must not do what you will spoil in the doing." This is nature's law, the law of common-sense. You mix medicine, and know nothing of scales and weights? You, a clodhopper, and undertake to pilot a ship? Absurd, you say; and yet what do you know of life? How can you walk upright without philosophy? How can you tell the ring of the genuine metal, and detect the faulty sound of the base alloy? Do you know what to seek, what to avoid, what to mark with white, what with black? Can you control your wishes, moderate your expenses, be indulgent to your friends? Do you know how to save and how to spend? Can you keep your month from watering at the sight of money, from burning at the taste of ginger? When you can say in truth, "All this is mine," then you are truly free. But if you retain the old man under the new title, I take back all that I have granted. You can do nothing that is right. Every action is a fault. Put forth your finger—you sin. There is not a half-ounce of virtue in your silly carcass. You must be all right or all wrong. Man is one. You can not be virtuous by halves. You can not be at once a ditcher and a dancer. You are a slave still, though the praetor's wand may have waved away your bonds. You do not tremble at a master's voice, 'tis true, but there are other masters than those whom the law recognizes. The wires that move you do not jerk you from without, but masters grow up within your bosom' (91-131).

Here the dialogue is dropped. We leave Dama, whose personality has been getting fainter all the time, and are treated to a series of more or less dramatic scenes in illustration of the Ruling Passions.

So Avarice and Luxury dispute about the body and soul of an un-Stoic slave (132-160).

A Lover tries to break the chain that binds him to an unworthy mistress (161-175).

Another is led captive by Ambition at her will (176-179).

Yet another is under the dominion of Superstition (180-188).

But why discourse thus? Imagine what the military would say to such a screed of doctrine. I hear the horse-laugh of Pulfennius, as he bids a clipped dollar for a hundred Greek philosophers—a cent apiece (189-191).

This Satire is justly considered by many critics the best of all the productions of PERSIUS, as it is the least obscure. The warm tribute to his master Cornutus may have had its share in commending the poem to teachers, who, of all men, are most grateful for gratitude. But apart from this revelation of a pure and loving heart, the peculiar talent of PERSIUS, which consists in vivid portraiture of character and situation, appears to great advantage in this composition. True, the introduction is not wrought into the poem, and the poet's discourse is too distinctly a Stoic school exercise, and reminiscence crowds on reminiscence, but there is a certain movement in the Satire, or Epistle, as it were better called, which carries us on over the occasional rough places, without the perpetual jolt which we feel every where else on the 'corduroy road' of PERSIUS'S Gradus ad Parnassum.

1-4. PERSIUS: Oh for a hundred voices, a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues!

1. Vatibus hic mos est: Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 2, 86: regibus hic mos est. Vatibus, with a sneer. see Prol., 7.—centum sibi poscere voces: Examples might be multiplied indefinitely from HOMER to Charles Wesley. Comp. IL., 2, 489: οὐδ' εἴ μοι δέκα μὲν γλώσσαι, δέκα δὲ στόματ' εἶεν; and VERG., Aen., 6, 625: non mihi si linguae centum sint oraque centum; also Georg., 2, 43; Ov., Met., 8, 532. Conington burlesques the passage by translating poscere 'put in a requisition for,' and optare 'bespeak.' By such devices humor of a certain kind might be extracted from elegies, and VERGIL be made 'to put in a requisition for Quintilius at the Bureau of the Gods,' HOR., Od., 1, 24, 12.

3. seu ponatur: The mood after seu—seu is determined on general principles (A., 61, 4, c). In practice, however, the Indicative is more common (G., 597, R. 4). The Subjunctive is to be explained by G., 666 (see last example), and A., 66, 2.—ponatur = proponatur (CIC., Tusc. Dis., 1, 4, 7). Comp. θείναι, θέσις. Jahn understands it as ponere lucum, 1, 70, posuisse figuras, 1, 86. Perhaps there is a play on the different senses of ponere. 'Serve up' would not be bad in view of vv. 9, 10.—hianda: 'To be spouted by some doleful actor.' 'Hianda has reference to the tragic mask, in which a wide aperture was cut for the mouth, to facilitate a distinct enunciation. From the appearance presented by the speaker, it soon came to be used of a bombastic style of utterance. Comp. carmen hiare, PROP., 2, 31, 6, and grande Sophocleo carmen bacchamur hiatu, JUV., 6, 636.' Pretor, after Jahn.

4. vulnera Parthi: Is Parthi object or subject? The passage is a reminiscence of HOR., Sat., 2, 1, 15: aut labentia equo describat vulnera Parthi. If Parthi is the object, an interpretation which is favored by the Horatian passage and by the propriety of the epic theme—for why should a Roman enlarge upon the wounds that the Parthian deals?—ducentis ab inguine ferrum must be rendered 'drawing the dart from his groin.' Still ab is not a suitable preposition, nor can it be defended by such expressions as ducere suspiria ab imo pectore, Ov., Met., 10, 402. Others think of 'trailing the shaft from his groin,' in which it had been imbedded. Comp. v. 160: a collo trahitur pars longa catenae. If Parthi is the subject, translate, 'The Parthian who draws the arrow from [the quiver] near his groin.' The Eastern nations wore the quiver low, the Greeks upon the shoulder. This line refers to epic poetry as the preceding to tragedy.

5-18. CORNUTUS: What need have you of a hundred mouths? You have no foolish tragedy to cram, no big epics to mouth. Your simple satire demands a simple style, the talk of every day, only better put. Your business is to scourge and pierce, and yet remember that you are a gentleman. Let these themes suffice you, and leave to others the stage-horrors of cannibalic feasts; yourself content with the pot-luck of the Roman cit.

5. Quorsum haec: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 7, 21.—aut: G., 460, R.; A., 71, 2.—robusti carminis offas: 'dumplings of substantial poetry,' 'lumps of solid poetry' (Conington). Offa is a dumpling of meal or flesh. Comp. APUL., Met., 1, 3, on the chokiness of a certain polentae caseatae offula grandior.

6. ingeris: ‘cram.’ The whole passage is intended to be coarse. ‘What great gobbets of stuffing song are you cramming yourself with, that you require a hundred throats to strain them down?’ Others understand: ingeris sc. populo. See v. 177.—centeno gutture = centum gutturibus. So centena arbore, VERG., Aen., 10, 207 (Conington).

7. grande: See 1, 14.—locuturi: See 1, 100.—nebulas: Jahn is reminded of HOR., A. P., 230: nubes et inania captet. Observe that legunto suggests the culinary figure below. The mists represent the vegetables, Procne and Thyestes furnish the meat.—Helicone: See Prologue. PERSIUS is as intensely Roman in poetic practice as he is Greek in philosophic theory.—legunto: The Imperative, instead of the Subjunctive, gives the tone of an edict or of a cookery-book.

8. Prognos—Thyestae: See Classical Dictionaries for the familiar myths. Observe the balance. Procne served up her son, Thyestes made a dinner off his. Both are common tragic themes. See HOR., A. P., 91. 186-187.—olla fervebit: ‘Who are going to set Thyestes’s pot a-boiling’ (Conington).

9. Glyconi: Glyco was a stupid actor of the day, who could not understand a joke. The Neronians have made the most of the fact, as reported by the Scholiast, that G. was manumitted by Nero, who paid his half-owner Vergilius 300,000 sesterces for his share. So, for instance, Lehmann (De A. Persii Satira Quinta, p. 17), who has nosed out all manner of subtle Neronian flavors in this innocent satire.—cenanda: Comp. 3, 46.

10. coquitur dum: When the action with dum, ‘while,’ is co-extensive with the action in the leading clause, the limit may be expressed by until, ‘while it is smelting’ = ‘until it is smelted’—massa: See note on 2, 67.

11. folle: The wind is squeezed ‘with’ or ‘in’ the bellows rather than ‘from’ the bellows. The Scholiast notices the Horatian reminiscence, Sat., 1, 4, 19: at tu conclusas hircinis follibus auras | usque laborantes, dum ferrum molliat ignis | ut mavis, imitare. Comp. also JUV., 7, 111: tunc immensa cavi spirant mendacia folles.—nec clauso murmure, etc.: ‘Nor with pent-up murmur croak to yourself until you are hoarse some solemn nonsense.’

157

13. scloppo: So Jahn (1868), instead of stloppo (1843). This is supposed to be a word coined to express the sound (comp. bombis, 1, 99). Conington renders ‘plop.’ Vaniček records it under SKAR, S. 183, and it may well be the ‘slap’ with which the distended cheeks are reduced, and hence the ‘plop’ which is heard. The childish trick may be witnessed wherever there are children. PERSIUS multiplies absurd and meaningless noises without any sharp distinction.

14. verba togae: ‘the language of every-day life.’ The fabula togata is Roman comedy, as opposed to the fabula praetexta, or Roman tragedy, and to the f. palliata, the subjects of which were Greek. PERSIUS insists on the connection of the national satire with the national comedy, and the scanty remains of the fabula togata deserve close comparison.—sequeris = sectaris. Prol., 11.—acri iunctura: ‘nice grouping,’ ‘telling combination.’ The words are familiar, but the setting is new. Comp. HOR., A. P., 47: notum si callida verbum | reddiderit iunctura novum; and 242: tantum series iuncturaque pollet | tantum de medio sumptis accedit honoris. An important passage, as showing the intense self-consciousness of the poet’s art.

15. ore teres modico: Jahn comp. ore rotundo, HOR., A. P., 323. The mouth stands for the style, and the position of the mouth symbolized the utterance (ore magis quam labris loquendum est, QUINT., 11, 3, 81). Teres as in CIC., De Orat., 3, 52, 199: est [oratio] et plena quaedam sed tamen teres et tenuis, non sine nervis et viribus. ‘A moderate rounding of the cheek’ (Conington); but although in view of v. 13 it would be desirable to retain the figure, it is hardly possible. ‘With smooth and compassed tone.’ As teres ore = ore modico, Hermann (L. P., II., 46) comp. Ov., Fast., 6, 425: lucoque obscurus opaco.—pallentis mores: The ‘spirit of the age’ is also the ‘body of the age.’ Hence the figure. ‘Pale’ with disease and vice (comp. 4, 47), ‘guilty.’—radere: Comp. 1, 107.

16. ingenuo ludo: ‘with high-bred raillery,’ ‘with raillery that a gentleman may speak and hear.’ PERSIUS has in mind εὐτραπέλία, the πεπαιδευμένη ὕβρις of ARISTOTLE, Rhet., 2, 12, as Conington suggests.—defigere: Various explained. So ‘post up,’ ‘placard’ (Casaubon); ‘pin to the ground’ (Conington); ‘pierce,’ like an arrow (Jahn); ‘sting,’ like a hornet, as in Ov., Fast., 3, 753: milia crabronum coeunt et vertice nudo, | spicula defigunt oraque summa notant. Comp. the use of figere, 3, 80.

158

17. hinc: From every-day life. König compares HOR., A. P., 318: vivas hinc ducere voces.—quae dicis: So Jahn (1868), after the best MSS. In 1843 we find dicas, which is more natural, but not necessary.—Mycenis: Dative, far more forcible than the locative Ablative. Jahn comp. Prol., 5: illis relinquo, a reading which he afterward abandoned. See G., 344, R. 3.

18. cum capite et pedibus: served up to Thyestes after he had finished his dinner. Comp. AESCHYL., Ag., 1594; SEN., Thyest., 764.—plebeia prandia: Your theme is ‘human nature’s daily food,’ not the heroic suppers of ‘raw-head and bloody-bones’ that teach us nothing. Mensa is contrasted with prandia (comp. SENECA’S sine mensa prandium, cited 1, 67) as ‘banquet’ with ‘meal,’ Tafel with Tisch.

19-29. PERSIUS: You understand my aims. I do not care to swell my page with frothy nonsense. And now that we are alone, I desire you to examine my heart, that you may see how you are enshrined in it—a theme for which I might well desire a hundred voices.

19. equidem: Here in accordance with common usage. See 1, 110.—bullatis nugis: ‘air-blown trifles' (Gifford). Bullatis: so Jahn (1868) with Hermann. The reading of the oldest MSS., pullatis, 'sad colored,' explained now as 'tragic stuff' (because mourners were pullati); now as stuff for the groundlings (because the common people were pullati), is scarcely tenable. Ampullatis, Jahn's conjecture, though defended by Lachmann (LUCRET., 6, 1067), is metrically bad; but the sense is excellent, and the reference would be to a passage which PERSIUS must have had in his mind. HOR., A. P., 97: proicit a m pullas et sesquipedalia verba. Even Thyestes is mentioned in the context, l.c. 91. Bullatis, 'bubbly.' Hermann (L. P., I., 32) comp. alata avis, and makes bullatis refer to tumorem et inanem verborum strepitum.

20. dare pondus fumo: Casaubon comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 42: nugis addere pondus. HORACE uses the expression in the sense of 'attaching importance.' PERSIUS means that these trifles are fitted to lend importance, to give seeming substance to mere vapors. Fumus is a synonym for 'humbug.' On dare idonea = idonea quae det, see G., 424, R. 4; A., 57, 8, f.

22. excutienda: See 1, 49. But the figure changes below, or there is a figure within a figure, the heart being compared to a wall, the wall to a dress. On the construction, see G., 431; A., 72, 5, c.

23. pars animae: Comp. te meae partem animae, HOR., Od., 2, 17, 5; animae dimidium meae, Od., 1, 3, 8.—Cornute: See Introduction, ix.

24. ostendisse: once for all. See G., 275, 1; A., 58, 11, d.—pulsa: κροῦε. See 3, 21.—dinoscere cautus: HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 51: cautum adsumere dignos. Comp. Prol., 11.

25. solidum crepet: like sonat vitium, 3, 21. G., 331, R. 2; A., 52, 3, a.—pictae tectoria linguae: The comparison is taken from a stuccoed party-wall painted to look solid. Comp. AFRAN. ap. NON., 152, 28, v. 14 (Ribbeck): fallaci aspectu paries pictus putidus (= puter). The notion in pictae belongs rather to tectoria than to linguae—'painted tongue-stucco.' The figure will not bear close examination any more than the stucco.

26. his, ut = ad haec ut. Comp. hoc, ut, v. 19. Others read hic.—centenas = centum. G., 310, R.; A., 18, 2, d.—deposcere: Notice the determination that lies in deposcere.

27. quantum fixi: This is not conceived as a dependent interrogative, as is shown by v. 29, where the antecedent of the parallel clause is expressed. G., 469, R. 3.—sinuoso: Comp. PLIN., H. N., 2, 37: cor prima domicilia intra se animo et sanguini praebet sinuoso specu. Sinuoso pectore = in recessu mentis, 2, 73.

28. voce: carelessly repeated after voces.—pura: 'honest.'

29. non enarrabile: i.e., save by the hundred voices. There is no contradiction, and even if there were—this is supposed to be poetry.—fibra: 1, 47.

30-51. When first I put away the things of boyhood and encountered the temptations of youth, and stood bewildered at the cross-roads of life, I threw myself into your sheltering arms, and put myself under your guiding hand. Happy the memory of those days and nights, as they brought common work and common rest. Surely a common star controls our destinies and makes us one.

30. pavidio: variously interpreted of the fear—1. Which an entrance on life breeds; 2. Which requires the protection of the praetexta; 3. Which the rule of tutors and governors inspires. The third view is favored by blandi comites, as Conington remarks. Comp. MART., 11, 39, 2: et pueri custos assiduusque comes with v. 6: te dispensator, te domus ipsa pavet.—custos purpura: 'the guardian purple.' Purpura = praetexta, the dress of boyhood, which was of itself a protection. This was exchanged for the toga when the nonage was over. Per hoc inane purpurae decus precor, HOR., Epod., 5, 7.—mihi: If cessit is taken absolutely, mihi may depend on the predicative notion in custos = quae mihi custos fuerat. Casaubon explains, mihi cessit, ut iam annis maiori vel etiam ut hosti. It seems best to combine the two: 'When the purple resigned its dreaded guardianship over me.'

31. bulla: the well-known 'boss,' which contained amulets and the like. Comp. 2, 70.—succinctis: 'Like cinctutis (HOR., A. P., 50), incinctos (OV., Fast., 2, 632), in allusion to the cinctus Gabinus, in which primitive dress they (the Lares) were always represented. It was worn over the left shoulder, leaving the right arm free' (Pretor). Conington renders succinctis, 'quaint.'

32. blandi: (fuerunt).—comites: Jahn considers these comites the same as those mentioned in 3, 7. See note. The epigram of MART., cited above, v. 30, makes for this view: the harsh tutors have become blandi comites. But most commentators prefer to take comites in its general sense.—tota Subura: On the construction, see G., 386; A., 55, 3, f. The Subura, as the focus of business life, was the haunt of persons who are sufficiently characterized as Suburanae magistrae, MART., 11, 78, 11.

33. permisit sparsisse: On the Inf., see G., 532, R. 1; A., 70, 3, a. On the tense, note on 1, 41. With the phraseology, Jahn comp. VAL. FLACC., 5, 247: tua nunc terris, tua lumina toto | sparge mari. Spargere is a happy word for a rapid, roving glance.—iam: ἤδη. The English idiom often refuses to give the exact force of iam. The youngster has got a 'sure enough' candidus umbo. The contrast in time is the former praetexta.—candidus umbo: 'Umbo was the knot into which the folds of the toga were gathered after passing the left shoulder' (Pretor). Of course the umbo was candidus, as the toga was.

34. iter ambiguum: See 3, 56.—vitae nescius error: is bewilderment from ignorance of life.

35. deducit: So Jahn (1843), a reading which he has strangely forsaken (1868) for diducit. Schlüter puts it neatly thus: homines in compita ubi viae diducuntur, deduci dicuntur. Compita does not mean the roads, but the place where the roads meet—the crossing (Schol.). De adds the notion of decision to ducit. Comp. in discrimen deducere, CIC., Fam., 10, 24, 4. The youth is brought to a point where he must choose.—trepidās: See 1, 74.

36. supposui: Almost 'I made you adopt me.' Supponere is used of supposititious children. As PERSIUS'S OWN father died while the poet was young, there is a tone of orphanage about the expression that appeals to our sympathy. 'I threw myself as a son into your arms.'—suscipis: is the correlative of supposui.

37. Socratico sinu: The loving care of Socrates is meant, as well as his wisdom, as Jahn has observed.—fallere sollers: On the construction, see G., 424, R. 4; A., 57, 8, f. 3; Prol., 11. 'Skilful to deceive,' in the sense of the gradual Socratic approach. The rule is not rudely applied, but cheats the warped nature into rectitude. Jahn's note amounts to this, that a ruler that understands deception, understands detection, and hence is a true ruler.

38. regula: 'ruler.' See note on 4, 11.

39. premitur ratione: Comp. VERG., Aen., 6, 80: fera corda domans fingitque premeudo.—vinci laborat = dum vincitur laborat, cum labore vincitur. 'Laborat shows that the pupil's mind co-operated with his teacher' (Conington).

40. artificem: Passive, arte factum, 'artistic,' 'finished.' The figure is of course taken from moulding in wax or clay.—ducit vultum: Comp. exigite ut teneros mores ceu pollice ducit | ut si quis cera vultum facit, JUV., 7, 237; only there the workman moulds, here the material. Transl. 'take on,' 'assume,' as in Ov., Met., 1, 402: saxa ducere formam (Jahn).—pollice: The thumb is largely used in moulding. See JUV., l.c., and Ov., Met., 10, 285; STAT., Achill., 1, 332, quoted by Jahn.

41. etenim: καὶ γὰρ. See 3, 48.—memini consumere: See Prol., 2.—soles = dies. The antithesis runs throughout. Soles—opus—seria are opposed to noctes—requiem—mensa.

162

42. primas noctes: 'the early hours of the night.'—epulis: 'for feasting.' Others, 'from feasting,' i.e., for study, 3, 54; 5, 62.—decerpere: The expression is a cross between carpe diem (HOR., Od., 1, 11, 8) and partem solido demere de die (HOR., Od., 1, 1, 20). Decerpere is to pluck with resolute, eager hand.

43. unum opus et requiem = unum opus et (unam) requiem (Jahn). Casaubon comp. VERG., Georg., 4, 184.

44. laxamus seria: Jahn comp. VERG., Aen., 9, 223: laxabant curas.

45. non equidem hoc dubites: On equidem, see note on 1, 110. With non dubites comp. non accedas, 1, 5.—foedere certo: Jahn comp. MANIL., 2, 475: iunxit amicitias horum sub foedere certo. Foedus certum, 'fixed law,' 'fixed principle.'

46. consentire dies: On the Inf., instead of the normal quin with Subj., see G., 551, R. 4; M., 375 c., Obs. 2. For the thought, comp. HOR., Od., 2, 17, 21: utrumque nostrum incredibili modo | consentit astrum.—ab uno sidere duci: Astrology was very popular in PERSIUS'S time, having been brought into vogue by Tiberius. It was the aristocratic mode of divination, and is compared by Friedländer (Sittengesch., 1, 347) with the spiritualism and table-turning of the present day. Philosophy was not proof against it; indeed, the later Stoics always had a leaning to it, and Panaetius was the only one that rejected it (Knickenberg, l.c. p. 79). All people of 'culture' talked about 'horoscope,' 'nativity,' and 'malign aspect,' just as the same class in our time speak of 'the spectroscope,' 'heat a mode of motion,' and 'the survival of the fittest.' HORACE and PERSIUS, who imitates HORACE, have caught up some of the current terms, and travel along the Zodiac in blissful ignorance of their own stars.

47. aequali Libra: So HOR., Od., 2, 17, 17: seu Libra seu me Scorprios adspicit. Comp. the whole passage.

48. Parca tenax veri: Comp. Parca non mendax, HOR., Od., 2, 16, 39. 'Fate is represented with scales in her hands, also as marking the horoscope on the celestial globe' (Jahn). The Parca of mythology is identified with the Fatum of the Stoics.—seu: Observe the irregularity of vel—seu instead of seu—seu.—nata fidelibus: 'ordained for faithful friends.' 'The hour of birth is said to be born itself, as in AESCHYL., Ag., 107, ξύμφυτος αἰών; SOPH., O. R., 1082, συγγενεῖς μῆνες' (Conington).

163

49. Geminos: Casaubon quotes MANIL., 2, 628: magnus erit Geminis amor et concordia duplex.

50. Saturnumque gravem, etc.: 'We together cross malignant Saturn by propitious Jove.' 'Saturnine' and 'jovial' are remnants of astrological belief. Nostro is not only 'our,' but 'on our side,' 'propitious.'

51. nescio quod: almost = aliquod. See v. 12.—est quod temperat: On the Mood, see G., 634, R. 1; M., 365, Obs. 2. With the expression, comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 187: scit genius, natale comes qui temperat astrum, where the parts are reversed.—me tibi temperat: The Dative is used after the analogy of miscere. 'Blends my being with thine.'

52-61. Our aims, our lives are one. But 'many men, many minds.' Each has his passion—the merchant, the man of ease, the lover of sport, the gamester, the rake—but they have to reckon with disease at last, and groan over the failure of their lives.

52. Mille hominum species: The Schol. quotes HOR., Sat., 2, 1, 27: quot capitum vivunt, totidem studiorum | milia. Proverbial is TER., Phorm., 2, 3, 14: quot homines, tot sententiae: suos cuique mos.—usus rerum: 'practice of life,' 'practice.' See 1, 1, note.—discolor: 'of various hue.'

53. velle suum cuique est: Comp. VERG., Ecl., 2, 65: trahit sua quemque voluptas. On velle suum, see 1, 9.—nec uno vivitur voto: Comp. 2, 7: aperto vivere voto. The negative form of a proposition following the positive strengthens it. Nec uno, ‘far different.’ With the examples that follow, Jahn comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 18, 21 seqq.

54. mercibus mutat piper: On the Abl., see G., 404, R.; A., 54, 8. The normal construction is merces mutat pipere; the other does not occur in archaic Latin nor in model prose. HORACE is the first to use it, e.g., Od., 3, 1, 47; Epod., 9, 27. LIVY introduces it into prose, but employs it only once (5, 30, 3). So Dräger, Histor. Syntax, § 235.—sub sole recenti: The Schol. comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 29: hic mutat merces surgente a sole ad eum quo | vespertina tepet regio.

55. rugosum piper: ‘wrinkled pepper,’ ‘shrivelled pepper,’ the shrivelling being the effect of the hot Eastern sun. None of your Italian pepper, but the genuine Eastern article. See note on 3, 75. —pallentis cumini: like pallidam Pirenen, Prol., 4. attribute for effect, an imitation and, strange to say, without attempt at enhancement, of the exsanguie cuminum of HOR., Ep., 1, 19, 18. Cuminum pallorem bibentibus gignit, PLIN., H. N., 20, 14, 57. Cumin was considered an indispensable condiment. The large use of it is shown by the compounds in Greek (κυμινοδόχη—θήκη, κτέ)—see Seiler ad ALCIPHON., 3, 58—and it ranks with pepper in PETRON., 49; with salt in ALEXIS, fr. 169 (3. 465 Mein.). Add PLUTARCH, Quaest. Conv., 5, 10.

56. inriquo somno: Inriquo is active. Sleep waters him, as it were, and increases his fat. Comp. VERG., Aen., 3, 511: fessos sopor in rigat artus. ‘Dewy sleep’ is almost too sweet for the passage. König, a prosaic soul, thinks of the ‘sweaty sleep’ of a man who is gorged with meat and drink.

57. campo: The gymnastic exercises of the campus, and especially of the campus Martius in Rome, are familiar. See HOR., Od., 1, 8, 4; Ep., 1, 7, 59; A. P., 162, referred to by Jahn.—decoquit = coquendo vires absumit. The word is employed of a man who has used up, run through, his means. So CIC., Phil., 2, 18, 44: tenesne memoria praetextatum te decoxisse? Here it is the man who is used up, who is made to go to pot.

58. putris: Gr. τακερός. ‘In wanton dalliance melts away’ (Gifford).—lapidosa cheragra: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 1, 31: nodosa cheragra. The chalk-stones of gout are compared with hailstones.

59. fregerit: Perf. Subj. in a generic sense. G., 569, R. 2 (end). Comp. postquam illi iusta cheragra | contudit articulos, HOR., Sat., 2, 7, 15 seqq.—veteris ramalia fagi: The comparison is between the fingers and the knotty boughs. Comp. HESIOD’S Πέντοζος, O. et D., 744. —fagi: Fagus, φηγός, and ‘beech’ (BHAG) are etymologically, but not botanically, the same. See Curtius, Grundzüge, No. 160.

60. A forcible passage, on which Conington says: ‘The conception here is of life passed in a Boeotian atmosphere of thick fogs and pestilential vapors, which the sun never penetrates—probably with especial reference to the pleasures of sense, of which PERSIUS has just been speaking. So the “vapor, heavy, hueless, formless, cold,” in Tennyson’s “Vision of Sin.”’—crassos dies: sub crasso aere (Jahn).—transisse: Heinr. comp. TIB., 1, 4, 33: vidi iam iuvenem, premeret cum senior aetas, | maerentem stultos praeteriisse dies.—lucem palustrem: ‘foggy’ = ‘foggy light’ is ‘light choked by fog.’ Crassos dies lucemque palustrem must be connected closely—‘gross days in foggy light’—so as to get rid of an awkward Zeugma with transisse.

61. sibi: with ingemuere (Conington).—iam seri: ‘too, too late.’ On iam, see v. 33. On seri, G., 324, R. 6; A., 47, 6.—ingemuere: like the Gr. Aorist. Comp. v. 187 and 3, 101. G., 228, R. 2; A., 58, 5, c. ‘Heave a sigh’ (Conington).—relictam: anteactam (Casaubon). Iam post terga reliquit | sexaginta annos, JUV., 13, 16.

62-65. Contrast of Cornutus’s noble mission. His creed the only creed for life.

62. at: in lively contrast.—nocturnis: Comp. 1, 90.—inpalescere: Comp. 1, 26.

63. purgatas: Purgare is an agricultural term like our ‘clean,’ and the metaphor is kept up. The field is the ear.—inseris: where we should expect seris.

64. fruge Cleanthea: Cleanthes is selected here on account of his strict life and virtuous poverty, in opposition to the luxury and wealth of the Romulidae, as Knickenberg remarks, l.c. p. 9.—petite: Mr. Pretor supposes that this is Cornutus’s invitation to the world. But if Cornutus speaks here, where does PERSIUS come in again?—unless he takes up the cudgels for his master in v. 66.

65. finem = τέλος.—miseris: ‘wretched else.’—viatica: Jahn quotes DIOG. LAERT., 1, 5, 80: ἐφόδιον ἀπὸ νεότητος εἰς γῆρας ἀναλάμβανε σοφίαν; and 5, 11, 21: κάλλιστον ἐφόδιον τῷ γῆρα ἢ παιδεία.—canis: G., 195, R. 1.

66-72. ‘There is time enough for that,’ says an impersonal sinner. ‘To-morrow will do as well.’ ‘“To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow.” To-morrow never becomes to-day.’

66. Cras hoc fiet, etc.: ‘I will do this that you ask of me to-morrow.’ ‘You will do to-morrow just what you are doing to-day.’ Jahn comp. OV., R. A., 104: Cras quoque fiet idem. Hermann arranges: Cras hoc fiet idem. Cras fiet? ‘This will, can be done to-morrow as well as to-day.’ ‘To-morrow, you say?’ Comp. PETRON., 82: quod hodie non est, cras erit.

67. nempe diem donas: ‘Well, what of it? Suppose I go on the same way to-morrow; it will only be a day—a great present, forsooth, to be haggling about!’ On nempe, see G., 500, R. 2.—cum venit—consumpsimus: more lively than cum venerit—consumpserimus (G., 229). One clause is involved in the other. G., 236, R. 4. This seems to be better than making venit iterative, and consumpsimus an Aoristic Perf.

69. egerit: ‘unloads,’ ‘carts off.’ Egerere is the opposite of ingerere (v. 6). Comp. SEN., Ep., 47, 2: venter maiore opera omnia egerit quam ingessit. Jahn makes egerit = impulerit, in order to save the figure. Compare truditur dies die, HOR., Od., 2, 18, 15, and PETRON., 45: dies diem trudit; and 82: vita truditur. But even this does not save the figure, and the sudden change of metaphor is in PERSIUS’S vein.—paulum erit ultra: ‘To-morrow will always be a little further on,’ is the common rendering, the figure changing at this point.

70. quamvis—vertentem: A later construction. G., 611, R.; M., 443, Obs.—cantum: ‘tire.’

72. cum curras: ‘seeing that you are running.’ Here cum is nearly equivalent to si, as it is thrown by sectabere into the future, and is thus made hypothetical. Comp. G., 591, R. 3, and 584.

73-90. What men need is Liberty—not the freedom of the city, which insures a quota of damaged corn; not the freedom of the freedman, which gives a slave a name to be free, while he is yet a slave; but the liberty wherewith Philosophy sets men free. The freedman demurs to this hard doctrine, but a Stoic adept silences him by his ‘Short Method.’

73. hac, ut, quisque: Hac is the adverb, ut = qua, quisque = quicumque (comp. quandoque = quandocumque, 4, 28), a sad complex of harshnesses, which may be rendered thus: ‘Liberty is what is wanted; not after the prevalent (G., 290, 7) fashion, by which each man that has worked his way up to a Publius in the Veline tribe is owner of a ticket for a ration of musty spelt.’ Other readings, such as hac quam ut quisque (Passow), hac qua quisque (Meister), are mere devices to relieve the grammatical situation, which is doubtless unnatural in the extreme, as hac seems to belong to libertate, and ut quisque is a familiar combination. Conington makes non hac the beginning of an independent sentence, and translates: ‘It is not by this freedom that every fire-new citizen, who gets his name enrolled in a tribe, is privileged to get a pauper’s allowance for his ticket.’—Velina: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 6, 52: hic multum in Fabia valet, ille Velina. The Veline was one of the last two tribes instituted (Becker, Rom. Alt., 2, 1, 170), and is supposed by some to be one of the four city tribes to which the libertini were restricted. The name of the tribe to which a man belongs is put in the Abl. (as a whence case). So M. Larcius L. f. Pomptina Pudens (Becker, l.c. 198).

167

74. Publius: Only freemen were entitled to the praenomen. Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 5, 32: Quinte, puta, aut Publi (gaudent praenomine molles | auriculae).—emeruit: literally ‘has served his time’ (of a soldier), ‘has worked his way up to be a Publius’ (supplying esse).—tesserula: the well-known tessera frumentaria, SUET., Aug., 41.

75. Quiritem: Rare in the Singular (Schol.).

76. vertigo: the ‘twirl’ of the familiar process of manumissio per vindictam. ‘The lictor touched the slave with the vindicta, the master turning him round and “dismissing him from his hand” with the words Hunc hominem liberum esse volo’ (Conington).—facit: is causal as well as faciat. G., 627, R.; A., 63.—Dama: Δημᾶς = Δημήτριος; according to others for Δημέας (Mehlhorn, Gr. Gr., 183), a common slave’s name.—non tressis: Jahn comp. non semissis homo, VATIN. ap. CIC., Fam., 5, 10, 1.

77. vappa: ‘dead wine,’ hence ‘mean liquor.’—lippus: the effect of drinking.—in farragine tenui: ‘in the matter of,’ and hence ‘for a poor feed of corn.’

78. verterit—exit = si verterit—exit. G., 257; A., 57, 5. Comp. v. 189. The Perf. is aoristic, ‘give him a whirl.’—momento: literally by the ‘motion,’ ‘by virtue,’ ‘by the act of whirling.’ ‘By dint’ would give an ironical turn.

79. Marcus: as Publius, v. 74. Jahn cites an inscription: M · FVFIVS · M · L · DAMA.—papae: Ironical admiration. ‘Wondrous change! Every body will trust this thief, this liar now!’ Papae (Gr. παπαῖ, βαβαῖ). ‘Whew!’ ‘Prodigious!’—recusas? Fie on you, if you do! See note on 4, 1.

168

80. adsigna tabellas: ‘your hand and seal to this document,’ ‘witness this document.’

82. mera: ‘pure and simple’ (ironical).—pillea: See 3, 106.

83. An quisquam—Bruto: These words are generally assigned to Dama, and it is certainly more humorous to make the promoted stable-boy argue in mood and figure than to rake up one of PERSIUS’S dead-alive spectators, as König does, and after him Pretor. Quisquam, because of the negative answer expected. See 1, 112, and G., 304; A., 21, 2, h.

84. ut voluit: The Stoic formula did not differ from the popular definition. Certainly it does not sound recondite to say: libertas est potestas vivendi ut velis, CIC., Parad., 5, 1, 34; or with ARRIAN, Diss., 4, 1, 1: ἐλεύθερός ἐστιν ὁ ζῶν ὡς βούλεται, but the words must be understood in their Stoic sense.

85. Mendose colligis: φαύλως συλλογίζεαι. ‘Your syllogism is faulty.’ ‘Marcus, thou reasonest ill.’

86. stoicus hic: ‘our Stoic friend’ (Conington). PERSIUS himself.—aurem—lotus: Comp. v. 63 and 1, 126. Lotus may be reflexive. G., 332, R. 2; A., 53, 3, c, R.—aceto: Vinegar was used in cases of deafness, CELS., 6, 7, 2, 3 (König).

87. accipio—tolle: PERSIUS admits the major, but denies the minor; denies both that the man has a will (volo) and that he is free (licet) to follow it’ (Conington). Mr. Pretor limits the concession to vivere (τὸ ζῆν), and explains: ‘The mere fact that you are a living creature, I admit; the inference contained in licet and ut volo, I altogether deny.’ ‘This dissection of the argument word by word may be ‘more in keeping with the character of the Stoic’—the Stoics were great choppers of logic—but it is not in keeping with the style of PERSIUS, who is subtle every where except in his arguments.

88. Vindicta: the festuca, or ‘wand,’ with which the lictor struck the manumittend. See v. 76.—postquam recessi: with a causal tone. See note on 3, 90.—meus: ‘my own man,’ hence ‘my own master’ (G., 299, R.); mei iuris (Schol.).

90. Masuri rubrica: ‘The canon of Masurius.’ ‘Masurius Sabinus, an eminent lawyer, lived in the reigns of Tiberius and Nero, and wrote a work in three books, entitled Ius Civile.’ Rubrica, ‘because the titles and first few words of the laws were commonly picked out with vermilion. Comp. perlege rubras | maiorum leges, JUV., 14, 192’ (Pretor, after Jahn). A low creature like Dama has a soul that is not above the statute-book; lofty spirits, like our Stoic, and believers in the higher law sneer at the canon and its maker. So MARC. ANTONIN., ap. FRONT., Ep., 2, 7 (p. 32 Naber), speaks of deliramenta Masuriana. Comp. QUINT., 12, 3, 11.—vetavit: for vetuit, reminds us of the slip of another youthful genius, Kirke White, and his ‘rudely blow’d.’ There is no sufficient warrant for the form.

91-131. A Stoic sermon. Text: Do nothing that you will spoil in the doing. You know nothing as you ought to know it, and you can do nothing as you ought to do it. You are ignorant of the first principles of morals; you have no control over your desires, your appetites. You may call yourself free, but you are a slave for all that. For one master without, you have a legion of masters within.

91. Disce: Comp. 3, 66.—naso: the simple Abl. as a whence case. Comp. 1, 83. The nose is the familiar seat of anger. THEOCR., 1, 18: καὶ οἱ αἰεὶ δριμεῖα χολὰ ποτὶ ῥινὶ κάθηται. For Biblical parallels, see Gesenius or Fürst, s.v. ἔρα. The anger is shown by snorting, or, as here, by snarling.—rugosa: Comp. corruget nares, HOR., Ep., 1, 5, 23.—sanna: 1, 62.

92. dum revello: ‘while I am plucking’ = ‘until I have plucked.’ See note on v. 10.—veteres avias: ‘old grandmothers,’ for ‘inveterate, rooted, grandmotherish notions.’ Comp. patruos sapere, 1, 11, and ὁ λέγόμενος γρ ἄ ὦν ὕθλος, PLAT., Theaet., 176B.—de pulmone: The lung is the seat of pride in 3, 27 (comp. suffla, 4, 20). Jahn regards it here as the seat of wrath.

93. erat: ‘as you thought.’ G., 224, R. 3; A., 58, 3, d.—tenuia rerum officia: ‘mastery of the subtle distinctions of duty.’ Tenuia, a trisyllable, as often. G., 717. Rerum, parallel with vitae. See 1, 1.

94. usum rapidae vitae: ‘the right management of the rapid course of life.’ The metaphor is taken either from a river (rapidus amnis, rapidi fluminum lapsus, rapidum flumen, rapidus Tigris, HOR.), which sweeps away the man who does not understand its current, or from a race-course in which there is no stopping, as Conington thinks (3, 67). Others understand rapidae simply as ‘fleeting.’

95. sambucam: The ordinary translation, ‘dulcimer,’ is not strictly correct, though ‘dulcimer’ suggests the exotic refinement of the sambuca, a four-stringed instrument of Eastern origin, synonymous with cultivated luxury.—citius aptaveris: θᾶττον ἂν ἀρμόσειας; written out = citius aptaveris quam praetor det, but it is better not written out. Notice the Perf. Subj. ‘You would sooner succeed in making a dulcimer fit, sooner get a dulcimer to fit [the hand of] a gawky camp-porter.’—caloni: used in its original sense of a soldier’s hewer of wood and drawer of water. PERSIUS, who has no admiration for soldiers themselves, would naturally select a soldier’s drudge as a type of awkwardness and stupidity. So, in effect, Conington.—alto: We combine ‘tall and gawky;’ ‘hulking’ (Conington). Comp. the sneer at the ingentis Titos, 1, 20, and Pulfennius ingens, 5, 190, and the ἀνήρ τρισκεκιδεκάπηχυσ of THEOCR., 15, 17.

96. stat contra: ‘confronts,’ ‘stops the way.’ Jahn comp. MART., 1, 53, 12: stat contra, dicitque tibi tua pagina: Fur es, a parallel which no conscientious commentator can quote without qualms. JUV., 3, 290: stat contra starique iubet.—ratio: ‘Right reason’ here is equivalent to natura below, which is itself equivalent to publica lex hominum. See Knickenberg, l.c. p. 20 seqq.—secretam: ‘private.’—garrit: It is hard choosing between gannit and garrit. MARTIAL has garrire in aurem, in auriculam, 1, 89, 1; 3, 28, 2, and aurem dum tibi praesto garrienti, 11, 24, 2; AFRAN., ap. NON., 452, 11 (283 Ribb.): gannire ad aurem numquam didici dominicam.

97. liceat: with reference to v. 84.

98. publica lex hominum naturaque: ‘The universal law of human nature.’ Of course in the peculiar Stoic sense. See note on 3, 67. ‘The doctrine of a supreme law of Nature, the actual source and ideal standard of all particular laws, was characteristic of the Stoics, and lay at the bottom of the Roman juristical notion of a ratio naturalis or ius gentium’ (Conington).

99. teneat actus: As tenere cursum is sometimes used in the sense of ‘check a course,’ ‘refrain from a course,’ so tenere vetitos actus means to refrain from, or, as Pretor translates, ‘hold in abeyance forbidden actions.’ To this effect König. But as tenere cursum is also used in the sense of ‘hold a course, keep on a course,’ Jahn’s version, which makes it a law of nature for weak ignorance to pursue forbidden actions, is not without justification. In that case fas est = ‘it is to be expected,’ as in operi longo fas est obrepere somnum. For the thought of the necessity of sin for the ignorant, see v. 119. But the immediate context favors the former interpretation. Casaubon’s tenere vetitos = habere pro vetitis is without warrant in usage.

100-104. Popular illustrations of the doctrine drawn from medicine and navigation, and from HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 114: navem agere ignarus navis timet: abrotonum aegro | non audet, nisi qui didicit dare.

100. certo conpescere puncto, etc.: ‘although you do not know how to check [that is, to bring to the perpendicular and keep there] the tongue or index [of the steelyard by putting the equipoise or pea] at a certain point.’ ‘Although you do not know how to use the steelyard’

(statera). On the examen, see 1, 6; punctum is one of the points or notches (notae) on the graduated arm. With nescius conpescere comp. callidus suspendere, 1, 118, and Prol., 11. —natura = lex, as above.

102. peronatus: The pero was a thick boot of raw-hide, crudus pero, VERG., Aen., 7, 690, and JUV., 14, 186: quem non pudet alto | per glaciem perone tegi, qui summovet Euros | pellibus inversis (Jahn). The peronatus arator is a clodhopper, a country bumpkin.

103. luciferi rudis: Not a good stroke. Some knowledge of the stars was necessary for the ploughman himself, as Casaubon remarks. See VERG., Georg., 1, 204 seqq. So notably of the Pleiades, HESIOD, O. et D., 383. 615.—Melicerta: Portunus, patron of sailors, VERG., Georg., 1, 437.—perisse: Comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 80: clament periisse pudorem | cuncti paene patres.

104. frontem: the seat of modesty for modesty itself. In English, 'face,' 'front,' and 'forehead' are used for the absence of modesty; but 'frontless' and 'effrontery' accord with the usage and in JUV., 13, 242: quando recepit | eiectum simul attrita de fronte pudorem?—de rebus: 'from the world,' or omitted. See 1, 1.—recto talo: Comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 176: cadat an recto stet fabula talo. Jahn comp. further PIND., Isthm., 6, 12: ὀρθῶ ἔστασας ἐπὶ σφυρῶ, and EUR., Hel., 1449: ὀρθῶ βῆναι ποδί. Transl. 'uprightly.'

105. ars: Philosophy. [Philosophus] artem vitae professus, CIC., Tusc. Dis., 2, 4, 12; sapientia ars est, SEN., Ep., 29, 3.—speciem: Jahn gave up in 1868 the hopeless specimen of 1843, which left qua in the next line utterly unprovided for. That this aberration of a distinguished scholar should have been followed at all is a sad instance of Nachbeterei—a German word, not exclusively a German vice.

106. ne qua: sc. species. Ne because of the general notion of apprehension in the sentence, as after videre. G., 548, R. 2; A., 70, 3, e.—subaerato auro: Subaeratus is a translation of ὑπόχαλκος. Ὑπόχαλκον νόμισμα is literally a coin (of gold or silver) with copper underneath. Of course we should say gilt or silvered copper coin. Subaerato auro, Abl. Abs.—mendosum tinniat: With mendosum comp. sonat vitium, 3, 21; solidum crepet, v. 25; with tinniat, QUINT., 11, 3, 31: sonis homines, ut aera tinnitu, dinoscimus. Translate the line: 'that no [seeming truth] give a faulty ring, due to the copper underneath the gold.'

107. forent: On the sequence, see G., 511, R. 2; A., 58, 10, a.

108. ilia prius creta, etc.: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 246: sanin creta an carbone notandi.

109. modicus voti: On the Gen., see G., 374, R. 2; A., 50, 3, c.—presso lare: 'Your establishment within your means?' Pressus opposed to diffusus.—dulcis: 'indulgent.' Observe the 'sweet reasonableness' of the ancient religionist. He, too, was an apostle of 'sweetness and light.'

110. iam nunc—iam nunc: 'At the very moment,' 'just at the right time,' hence 'at one instant, at another.'—astringas—laxes: 'shut tight—open wide.'—granaria: 6, 25, Plural of abundance. Comp. 2, 33.

111. inque luto: It was a favorite trick of the Roman boys to solder a piece of money to a stone in the pavement, in order to have a laugh at any one who might stoop to pick it up (Scholiast). Similar pranks are common enough now. Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 16, 63: qui liberior sit avarus | in triviis fixum, cum se demittit ob assem | non video.

112. glutto: On the formation, see cachinno, 1, 12. 'Lickerish-mouthed that you are' would give the coarse tone.—salivam: Doth not our mouth water?—Mercurialem: Excited by gain and not by food. See 2, 12. 'Water of treasure-trove' (Conington).

113. haec mea sunt, teneo: The commentators notice the legal tone.—cum dixeris: G., 584.

114. -que ac: a rare combination.—praetoribus ac Iove dextro: a kind of Zeugma = praetoribus [auctoribus] et Iove dextro, 'by the grace of the praetors and Jove.' The Jupiter here meant is the Iuppiter Liberator (Ζεὺς ἔλευθέριος), so famous in connection with the death of PERSIUS's friend, Thrasea Paetus, TAC., Ann., 16, 35. See Intro., xiii.

115. sin: '(if not) but if,' G., 593; A., 59, 1, a; Ribbeck, l.c. 14.—cum: 'whereas,' 'after,' adversative.—nostrae farinae: 'one of our grain, batch, set,' 'one of our kidney'—doubtless a proverbial expression. The metaphor is taken from the mill or from the bakery. The batch referred to is the Stoic school. Of course the statement is ironical. 'Whereas (to judge by your bold pretensions to liberty) you were a little while ago in our set.'

116-118. The drift of the passage is plain enough. 'A change of fortune does not bring with it a change of character. If you possess all that you say you possess, then you are free and wise. But if you are, after all, the same old man, I take back all that I have granted. You are a fool, a slave.' This familiar Stoic thesis is covered over with a mass of confused metaphors, at least according to the commentators and translators.—pelliculam veterem retines: is supposed to be: 1. An ass in a lion's skin, after HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 22; or, 2. A snake that has not cast its slough (Jahn).

—astutam servas vulpem: is the fox dressed up like a lion, HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 186.—vapido pectore: contains an allusion to 'dead wine,' vappa, v. 77, and is opposed to incoctum generoso pectus honesto, 2, 74.—funem reduco: 1. Of a beast that has had rope allowed it and is pulled in; 2. Of a cock-chafer that is played at the end of a string (AR., Nub., 763).—fronte politus: words that do not fit in very satisfactorily with ass, fox, flat wine, restiff beast, or buzzing cock-chafer. My admiration of PERSIUS is not unqualified, but this medley is almost too wild even for his turbid genius; and here, as elsewhere, commentators have been misled by looking at mere verbal coincidences with HORACE. There is an Aesopic fable (149 Halm), the moral of which gives the substance of this passage: ὁ λόγος δηλοῖ ὅτι οἱ φαῦλοι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, κἂν τὰ προσχήματα λαμπρότερα ἀναλάβωσι, τὴν γοῦν φύσιν οὐ μετατίθενται. In this fable, which bears a family likeness to φαῖη ποτ' ἄνδρός (BARR. 32), La Chatte Metamorphosée en Femme (LA FONTAINE, 2, 18), Zeus, charmed with the cleverness of Reynard, had made him king of the beasts; but wishing to try whether fortune had changed his character, he caused a beetle to fly before His Majesty's eyes as he was borne by in state. The fox could not withstand the temptation, leaped from the litter, and tried to catch the game in such unseemly guise that Zeus deposed him. The fox is Dama, made Marcus; nay, become a philosopher (nostrae farinae), and the philosopher is king: sapiens—dives | liber, honoratus, pulcher, rex denique regum, as HORACE puts the Stoic doctrine (Ep., 1, 1, 107). But if despite his fair seeming, his smooth regal brow (fronte politus), he retains his old nature (pelliculam veterem), and the old Reynard—the old rascal that swindled his master for a feed of corn—is still in his heart (astutam servas sub pectore vulpem), our deus ex machina takes back all that he has granted; he is a slave still.

117. relego: So Jahn. Inferior MSS. have repeto. Relego evidently suggested the new figure, funem reduco.

119. digitum exsere, peccas: a favorite expression with the Stoics to show that the wise man alone understands the conduct of life. ΕΠΙΚΤΕΤ., fr. 53: ἡ φιλοσοφία φησὶν ὅτι οὐδὲ τὸν δάκτυλον ἐκτείνειν εἰκὴ προσήκει (Casaubon).

120. nullo ture litabis: Comp. 2, 75. Here litabis = litando impetrabis.

122. fossor: 'a ditcher, a clown, a clodhopper.' Fossor = in cultus. Comp. 'navvy.' JUVENAL (11, 80) speaks of the squalidus fossor; CATULLUS (22, 10) combines fossor and caprimulgus, EUR. (El., 252), σκαφεύς and βουφορβός.

123. tris tantum ad numeros moveare: 'dance three steps in time.' Ad, as often, of the standard; numerus = ῥυθμός; moveri of the dance, as in HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 125, and as motus in Od., 3, 6, 21: motus doceri gaudet Ionicos | matura virgo.—satyrum: a kind of Cognate Accusative, as in HOR., l.c.: qui | nunc satyrum, nunc agrestem Cyclopa movetur. PERSIUS selects the satyrus in distinct opposition to the agrestis Cyclops, a more congenial dance for the agrestis fossor. See the commentators on HORACE.—Bathylli: Bathyllus was a famous dancer in the time of Augustus. More bookishness. See PHAEDR., 5, 7, 5; JUV., 6, 63.

175

124. Liber ego: The language of Dama. Only Dama is fading out. 'PERSIUS meets this reassertion of freedom with a new answer. Before he had contended that fools had no rights; now he shows that they have no independent power' (Conington).—Unde datum hoc sentis: So HOR., Sat., 2, 2, 31: Unde datum hoc sentis, only sentis here is equivalent to censes (Jahn). On the interrogative with the Participle, see 3, 67. Unde datum, 'Who allowed you?' unde being = a quo. Comp. inde, 1, 126, and G., 613, R. 1; A., 48, 5.—tot subdite rebus: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 7, 75: tunc mihi dominus rerum imperiis hominumque | tot tantisque minor = ἡσσων = subditus.

125. an: 'or' (do you mean to say?) 'what?' See 1, 41.—relaxat: in a general sense. Exit Dama. Enter Impersonal Tu.

126. I puer: sample order of a sample master.—strigiles: A man might go to a common bath, but he would not like to use a common scraper (strigilis, ξύστρα). On the strigilis, see, if needful, the commentators on JUV., 3, 263.—Crispini: Perhaps the bath-keeper. The name is Horatian, Sat., 1, 2, 120, and elsewhere.

127. si increpuit: The slave loiters, the master scolds.—'cessas nugator:' Much more effective in the mouth of the master than as an apodosis to si increpuit, as Hermann has it, and Jahn (1868); though Schlüter's remark, verba 'cessas nugator?' dominum, non philosophum decent, does not amount to much, when we consider that the philosopher is PERSIUS himself. Nugator is used here of wasting time; but the use of nugari and its forms, which were often addressed to slaves, is wider, like the English 'fool.' So in PETRON., 52, a boy lets a cup fall, and Trimalchio cries, ne sis nugax. With cessas comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 14: semel hic cessavit. 'What do you mean by this loitering, you dawdler, you?'—servitium acre: 'the goad of bondage,' as Conington suggests. Acre, from the same radical as aculeus.

176

128. nihil nec quicquam: G., 482, R. 3.

129. nervos: 'wires.' The figure of the puppet (sigillarium, ἄγαλμα νευρόσπαστον) as a favorite one with the Stoics, to judge by M. ANTONINUS, who uses it very often, e.g., σιγιλάρια νευροσπαστούμενα, 7, 3; νευροσπαστία, 6, 28. Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 7, 80: tu mihi qui imperitas alii servis miser atque | duceris ut nervis alienis mobile lignum.—agitat: 'There is nothing from without to set your wires going.' Your masters are within.—iecore: See 1, 25.

130. domini: An immemorial figure. So SOPHOCLES of Love. Di meliora, inquit, libenter vero istinc sicut a domino agresti ac furioso profugi, CIC., Cat. Mai., 14, 47.—qui: 'how?'—exis = evadis. See 1, 46; 6, 60.

131. atque = quam. G., 311, R. 6.—hic = de quo loquimur. G., 290, 3.—metus erilis = metus eri. G., 360, R. 1; 363, R.; A., 50, 1, a. 'If I be a master, where is my fear?' Mal., 1, 6. The assumption of Hendiadys, 'fear of the master's whip,' is unnecessary, and makes the passage less forcible.

132-191. The remainder of the Satire is taken up with descriptions of the ruling passions: Avarice (132-142), Luxury (143-160), Love (161-175), Ambition (176-179), Superstition (180-189). The language is lively and mimetic, and forcibly recalls the connection between comedy and satire.

132-160. Avarice finds you snoring, makes you get up, thrusts a bill of lading in your hand, cuts out work for you—not very honest work either—and chides you till she gets you to the ship. As you are about to embark, Luxury takes you aside, remonstrates with you, reminds you of the annoyances of a sea voyage. And all for what? The difference between five and eleven per cent. Why so greedy? ‘Life let us cherish.’ Enjoy it while you may. And so you are in a strait betwixt two. First you submit to one, then to the other master; and when you have once rebelled, you must not say, ‘I have broken my bonds.’ So a struggling hound may wrench away the staple, but drags the chain after it.

132. Mane stertis: a reminiscence of himself, 3, 3.

134. saperdam: Sing. for the Plur. Comp. mena, 3, 76. The saperda (σαπέρδης, κορακῖνος) was a cheap fish for salting. The best came from the Palus Maeotis (Sea of Azow, Balik-Denghis, or Fish-sea), where they were caught in vast quantities. ‘Salt herring.’—Ponto: a whence case.

135. castoreum, stuppas, hebenum, tus: A mere hodge-podge. Comp. MENAND., fr. 720 (4, 279 Mein.): στυππεῖον, ἐλέφαντ’, οἶνον, ἀύλαιαν, μύρον. The wares are mainly Eastern. Musk came from Pontus, ebony and frankincense from the Far East.—lubrica Coa: ‘slippery Coans,’ may be understood of ‘oily (or laxative) Coan wines,’ HOR., Sat., 2, 4, 29, or of ‘soft Coan vestments,’ which were little more than woven air, HOR., Od., 4, 13, 13. The use of Coa for ‘Coan robes’ is sustained by OV., A. A., 2, 298: Coa decere puta, even if HOR., Sat., 1, 2, 101, be cavilled at, and the effect is droller.

136. recens primus piper: Recens, ‘fresh,’ ‘just in;’ primus, ‘forestall the market.’—ex sitiente camelo: The thirsty camel brings the scene before our eyes—comp. ante boves, 1, 74—and shows that the genuine Indian pepper is meant, the rugosum piper of v. 55. The camel must have come a long way to be thirsty (sitim quadriduo tolerat, PLIN., H. N., 8, 18), but Madam Avarice will not let her slave wait until the camel has been unloaded and has had its drink.

137. verte aliquid; iura: Verte aliquid is said with impatience, and aliquid is to be urged. Comp. frange aliquid, 6, 32; dest aliquid, 6, 64; fodere aut arare aut aliquid ferre, TER., Heaut., 1, 1, 17. ‘Do something or other in the way of trade.’ This obviates Jahn’s objection, who finds the expression tame after the preceding list, and prefers to make vertere = versuram facere, ‘borrow money’ (to pay debts), and to interpret iura of swearing out of the obligation. But the connection in which iura stands shows that it is professional, and hence dishonorable; and though verte aliquid is not necessarily immoral, observe that in English we add ‘honest’ to the phrase ‘turn a penny,’ if we wish to prevent a sinister interpretation, which is the interpretation here, as König remarks. As for the ‘tameless,’ mercari is ‘tame’ after vende animam lucro, 6, 75.

138. varo: or baro, ‘lout.’ This obscure word is entered by Vaniček (Etym. Wörterb., S. 36) under KAR (KVAR)—comp. varus, ‘crooked’—so that varo would be ‘a wrong-headed creature,’ ‘a perverse blockhead.’ The verb obvaro occurs in ENNIUS (Trag., 2 Vahl.), and varo (Subst.) would be a formation like cachinno (1, 12) and palpo (5, 176).—regustatum digito terebrare salinum: After the Greek proverb: ἄλιαν τρυπᾶν (of extreme poverty). Casaubon quotes, and every body after him, APOLL. TYAN., Ep., 7: ἐμοὶ δ’ εἶη τὴν ἀλιαν τρυπᾶν ἐν Θέμιδος οἴκῳ. ‘To taste and taste until you bore a hole with your finger in the salt-cellar.’ ‘To lick the platter clean.’—salinum: Only the most advanced philosophers professed to consider salt, which even the miser could not well dispense with (4, 30), as a luxury. So Thrasyclus, in LUC., Tim., 56: ὄψον δὲ ἥδιστον θύμον ἢ κάρδαμον ἢ εἶ ποτε τρυφῶην ὀλίγον τῶν ἄλῶν.

139. perages: according to Casaubon, an imitation of the Gr. διάγειν. Warrant for the ellipsis of vitam or aetatem seems to be lacking. Some wish to read perges here, and combine it with terebrare. If so, the word perges must not be translated ‘continue’ τρυπῶν διατελεῖς, but ‘proceed.’ See the Dictionaries. There is no authority for making perages = perges.—vivere cum Iove: Madam Avarice is blasphemously familiar in her expressions. ‘To live on good terms with Jupiter.’

140. pellem: simply ‘a skin,’ which might serve as many purposes as a modern traveller’s shawl. Jahn interprets it as meaning a sort of packing cloth (segestre), and compares PETRON., 102. This is much more likely than the pastoria pellis of OV., Met., 2, 680, the βαίτη of THEOCR., 3, 25, elsewhere called νάκος, 5, 2, ‘a peasant’s coat of raw hide.’—succinctus: ‘high girt,’ hence ‘equipped.’—oenophorum: ‘a wine case.’ Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 6, 109: pueri lasanum portantes oenophorumque.

141. Ocius ad navem: It matters not who says this: ‘Off to the ship this instant.’ We are on the wharf, where such cries are in the air; but if we must assign them to somebody, they are best assigned to the master, who hurries the slaves on board.—quin: G., 551,1; A., 70, 4, g.—trabe vasta: ‘mammoth ship.’ The man’s greed is indicated by the size of the ship, as contrasted with the slenderness of his personal equipment. Vastum Aegaeum, another reading, would be an epithet wasted, a rare extravagance in PERSIUS.

142. rapias: ‘scour.’ Casaubon comp. STAT., Theb., 5, 3: rapere campum. So VERG., Georg., 3, 103: campum | corripuere. The notion is that of devouring.—sollers: ‘artful’ (literally, all-art).

143. seductum: Comp. 2, 4; 6, 42.—quo deinde ruis? So VERG., Aen., 5, 741. Deinde, ‘next.’

144. quid tibi vis? Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 2, 69. G., 351, R.; A., 51, 7, d.—calido: is proleptic. ‘Your breast is heated by a rising of potent bile.’—mascula = robusta (Jahn). Mascula bilis means bilis nigra, μελαγχολία. Conington compares the Greek use of ἄρσην as κτύπος ἄρσην, SOPH., Phil., 1455. See 6, 4.

145. intumuit: Comp. 2, 14; 3, 8.—non exstinxerit: οὐκ ἂν σβέσειε. G., 629 (250); A., 60, 2, b.

—urna: nearly three gallons, half an amphora.—cutatae: the remedy for madness from this cause, HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 53.

146. mare transilias: G., 251; A., 57, 6. Conington's 'skip across' would hardly answer for HORACE'S non tangenda rates | transiliunt vada, Od., 1, 3, 24. Tr. 'vault over.'—torta cannabe: 'Twisted hemp' is 'rope,' but PERSIUS probably means a 'coil of rope.'—fulto: with tibi. Jahn quotes JUV., 3, 82: fultusque toro meliore recumbet. A coil of rope will be your cushion and a bench your table.

147. Veientanumque rubellum: The Veientana uva (MART., 2, 53, 4) yielded a coarse red wine. Et Veientani bibitur faex crassa rubelli, MART., 1, 103, 9. Not a happy stroke, as Teuffel has observed. A sea voyage does not involve bad wine.

148. vapida pice: 'fusty pitch.' Jars were pitched to preserve the wine.—laesum: 'damaged.'—sessilis obba: 'broad-bottomed jorum,' 'squab jug' (Gifford). Obba is an obsolete word for a large drinking-cup. Conington's 'noggin' does not hold enough.

149. quincunce: As an as a month is twelve per cent. per annum, so 5/12 as (quincunx) is five per cent., and deunx eleven.

150. nutrieras: We use 'nursing' in similar connections, but rather in the sense of 'husbanding.' The figure is an extension of the Greek τόκος. See SHAKSP., M. of V., 1, 3, where the 'breed for barren metal' embodies an ancient prejudice. Comp. further HOR., Ep., 1, 18, 35: nummos alienos pascet.—nummi—pergant avidos sudare deunces: So Jahn (1843). 'May go on to sweat out a greedy eleven per cent.' Hermann edits: nummos—peragant avido sudore deunces, and so Jahn (1868). H. (L. P., II., 57) refers to bona peragere (6, 22), and says that the merchant, dissatisfied with his modest five per cent. which had increased his capital, goes in for eleven per cent., which gobbles it up, and has his sweat for his pains. On pergant, see note on v. 139; with sudare deunces comp. VERG., Ecl., 4, 30: sudabunt roscida mella.

151. indulge genio: See note on 2, 3.—nostrum est quod vivis: Various interpretations. 'Your real life is mine,' i.e., 'only that part of life which you bestow on me is life' (Casaubon, and so, in effect, Jahn). 'Your life belongs to me and you (nostrum answering to carpamus dulcia), not to any one else, such as Avarice, and it is all that we have' (Conington). 'It is all in our favor that you are alive' (Pretor)—clearly wrong. There is an evident reminiscence of the Horatian quod spiro et placeo, si placeo, tuum est (Od., 4, 3, 24), which sustains Casaubon's view.

152. cinis et manes et fabula fies: See note on 1, 36. There are clearly three stages, as Conington suggests: 'first ashes, then a shade, then a name.' With fabula fies comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 13, 9: fabula fias, and Od., 1, 4, 16: iam te premet nox fabulaeque manes.

153. vive memor leti: So HOR., Sat., 2, 6, 97.—hoc quod loquor inde est: 'What I am saying—this speech of mine—is so much off, so much time lost.' Comp. dum loquimur fugerit invida | aetas, HOR., Od., 1, 11, 7.

154. en quid agis? See 3, 5.—duplici hamo: 'a couple of hooks.' If hamo is a fish-hook, scinderis is a metaphor within a metaphor. 'You are like a fish distracted by two hooks,' not knowing which to bite at. Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 7, 74: occultum visus decurrere piscis ad hamum, and for scinderis, VERG., Aen., 2, 39: scinditur incertum studia in contraria vulgus. The executioner's hook, which others understand, is generally uncus; JUV., 10, 66: Seianus ducitur unco.

155. sequeris: See note on 3, 5.—subeas oportet: G., 535, R. 1; A., 70, 3, f, R.

156. oberres: Gr. δραπετεύειν, 'go at large' (Pretor).

157-158. nec—dicas = neu dicas: See note on 1, 5.

159. nam et: (Don't say so) 'for.' 'Why, there's the dog that, like you (et), breaks its fastening.'—luctata: 'by a wrench.'—nodum: 'is the knot by which the chain is fastened to the bar of the door, (sera). Comp. PROP., 4, 11, 25-6: Cerberus et nullas hodie petat improbus umbras, | sed iaceat tacita lapsa catena sera' (Pretor).—et tamen: So Jahn (1868). At tamen, the reading of most MSS., can not stand, if Madvig is right in maintaining that at tamen always means 'at least.' Hermann's ast tamen is well supported by MSS., and is more vigorous than et.

160. a collo: G., 388, R. 2; A., 42, 2.—pars longa catenae: The long chain hampers its flight, and makes it easier to catch. The comparison clearly suggests the next picture.

161-175. PERSIUS, knowing little of love or liaison, goes to his Greek books for an example, and finds it, where it was not far to seek, in MENANDER'S Eunuch. HORACE (Sat., 2, 3, 259 seqq.) follows TERENCE'S adaptation, PERSIUS seems to have stuck to the original. Hence the dialogue is between Chaerestratus (Χαιρέστρατος), the young master, and Davus (Δᾶος), the confidential servant, and not between Phaedria and Parmeno, as in the Latin dramatist.

CH. Davus, I'm going to put a stop to this sort of thing.—D. Thank Heaven for that!—CH. But—I should not like to hurt her feelings. Do you think she'll cry?—D. Well, if you talk that way, you had better not kick over the traces at all. She will give it to you soundly when she gets hold of you again, and she will get hold of you again as soon as she calls you. Don't be making suppositions. Go back to her in no case.

A man who can make such a resolution and keep it—here is your free man, not the lictor's whirligig.

161. Dave, cito: Observe how he jerks out the words between the gnawings.—credas iubeo: G., 546, R. 3.—finire dolores, etc.: From HOR., l.c. 263: an potius mediter finire dolores.

162. praeteritos: logically superfluous with finire, and yet not bad dramatically; 'that I have been having, undergoing.'—crudum: predicative, 'to the raw,' 'to the quick.' Comp. 1, 106: demorsos unguis.

182

163. a d rodens: more natural than abrodens. 'He is in meditation, not in despair' (Hermann).—siccis: opp. to madidis, ebriis. 'What! shall I be a standing disgrace in the way of my sober relations?'

164. rumore sinistro: 'What? make myself the talk of all the scandal-mongers by squandering my estate?'

165. limen ad obscenum: 'at a bawdy-house.' See note on 1, 109. He puts the case strongly. Remember that he is shut out.—frangam: colloquial, 'smash up,' 'make flinders of.'—Chrysidis: In TERENCE the lady's name is Thais, not Chrysis.—udas: 'dripping.' With what? With perfumes (LUCR., 4, 1179), with wine (HOR., Od., 1, 7, 22), with tears (OV., Am., 1, 6, 18), with rain (HOR., Od., 3, 10, 19), with the sweat of the commentators of PERSIUS.

166. Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 4, 51: ebrius et, magnum quod dedecus, ambulet ante | noctem cum facibus.—ante fores canto: Antique erotic literature is full of the caterwaulings of excluded lovers (παρακλαυσίθυρα).

167. puer: 'Davus encourages his master, hence puer instead of TERENCE and HORACE'S ere' (Conington). 'My young master' gives the tone here, 'my boy' below.—sapias: 'I do hope you are going to show your sense.' Rather optative than imperative.—dis depellentibus: depulsoribus = dis averruncis. The Gr. is ἀποτρόπαιος, ἀπωσίκακος, ἀλεξίκακος. Comp. ἀποτρόποισι δαίμοσι, AESCH., Pers., 203 (quoted by Pretor).

169. Nugaris: 'at your old nonsense, I see.' See v. 127.—solea: The slipper was and is a matronly instrument of torture (LUC., D. D., 11, 1), and hence the fun of its application to grown-up men, as in the familiar story of Hercules and Omphalé, LUC., D. D., 13, 2. 'To slipper' would be understood as well in a modern nursery as βλαυτοῦν was in a Greek gynaikonitis. Philtra quibus valeat mentem vexare mariti | et solea pulsare natis, JUV., 6, 611-12.—obiurgabere: a terminus technicus. PETRON., 34: colaphis objurgare puerum iussit.—rubra: A dramatic touch. This 'No Goody Two Shoes' wore the fashionable red slippers. Comp. the talon rouge of the last century.

170. ne trepidare velis = noli trepidare. 'Pray don't undertake to be restiff, to be plunging about.' Chaerestratus is a wild beast in the toils. This suggests ferus, and then the metaphor is dropped, unless exieras, v. 174, be a remnant of it.

183

171. The distribution of what follows is not clear. Jahn and Hermann make Davus's speech end with dicas, so that haud mora is the reply which the slave puts into the mouth of his master. 'If she should call you, you would say: "Anon, anon, mistress."' Chaerestratus speaks the words from Quidnam to accedam, and Davus concludes with si totus—nec nunc. If Jahn's view be adopted, I do not see how we are to reject the old conjecture ne tunc or nec tunc for the reading ne nunc, nec nunc, v. 174. According to Heinrich, followed by Maclean and Conington, haud mora is adverbial, and the words quidnam—accedam are attributed by Davus to Chaerestratus. 'In TERENCE,' says Conington, 'the lover has received a summons before the scene begins, and he deliberates whether to obey it. In PERSIUS he is trying to resolve under the pressure of disappointment, and even then can not make up his mind; so that his servant tells him that if he should be summoned back, he is pretty sure to entertain the question.' I have followed Heinrich's arrangement. Speech within speech is as characteristic of PERSIUS as metaphor within metaphor.

172. nec nunc: So Jahn in his ed. of 1868. Ne nunc, his former reading, for ne nunc quidem, condemned by Madvig, has a doubtful support in HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 262, a clear support in PETRON., 9, 47.—arcessat: So Jahn for arcessor, which is excessively harsh, by reason of the double change, person and mood, in supplicet.

174. si exieras: εἴ γ' ἐξέβης. 'If (as you pretend you did) you got away heart-whole and fancy-free, don't go to her even now.' Si with Pluperf. Ind. (not iterative) is not common, CIC., N. D., 2, 35, 90. Others read exieris.—nec nunc: sc. accedas.—hic, hic: The Adverb, as appears from in festuca. Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 17, 39: hic est aut nusquam quod quaerimus.

175. festuca: is generally explained as a synonyme for vindicta. Others refer it to the practice of throwing stubble on the manumitted slave, PLUT., De Sera Num. Vind., p. 550 (Conington).—ineptus: 'as if a lictor could make a man truly free!' (Jahn).

176-179. Ambition's Slave.

176. palpo: literally 'patter, stroker,' 'softsawder-man,' i.e., electioneerer. Another of the verba togae. See note on 1, 12. Palpo is explained by Io. Sarisberiensis (ap. Jahn) as 'one who feels his way with the people;' but this is not so simple nor so much in accordance with the use of palpare.—ducit hiantem: Comp. HOR., Sat., 1, 2, 88: emptorem inducat hiantem, where Bentley reads ducat on account of this passage. Also VERG., Georg., 2, 508: hunc plausus hiantem—| corripuit, and SOLON, 13, 36 (Bergk), χᾶσκούτεες κούφαις ἐλπῖσι τερπόμεθα.

184

177. cretata = candidata. Togas were chalked then, as belts are pipe-clayed now. The candidate naturally put on his best. 'My Lady Canvass in holiday attire, in spotless white.'—vigila: 'Be up early,' in the same sense as our phrase, 'You must get up early to do this or that.' There is no special reference to the morning salutatio.—cicer: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 182: in cicere atque faba bona tu perdasque lupinis, | latus ut in circo spatiere et aeneus ut stes. The vetch was a vulgar vegetable.

178. nostra: nobis aedilibus celebrata (Jahn). On the ironical First Person, see 3, 3.—Floralia:

See the Dictionaries.

179. aprici = apricantes. See 4, 18. 19. To 'love to live i' th' sun' (SHAKSP.) is common to the feebleness of age and the luxury of youth, 4, 33.—quid pulchrius: Snatch of the old men's chat (Hermann). Ironic comment of PERSIUS (Jahn). The former is more in PERSIUS'S manner.

at: An abrupt transition to the Thralldom of Superstition (180-188). Whether the slave of superstition is identical with the slave of ambition or not is not certain—probably not.

180. Herodis—dies: Probably Herod's birthday, celebrated by the sect of the Herodians. PERSIUS takes Herod as the most familiar Jewish personage to indicate Jewish superstition. On the spread of Judaism in the Roman Empire, see Friedländer, Sittengesch., 3, 489.—uncta fenestra: The 'window' is 'greasy' from the oil-lamps.

181. lucernae: Those who wish illustrations for what they can see with their own eyes, may consult Friedländer, l.c. 1, 292. The lights remind one of the Feast of Tabernacles.

182. violas: Comp. JUV., 12, 90: omnis violae iactabo colores. The violet may be our violet or the pansy (viola bicolor).—rubrumque amplexa catinum: The tunny is so large that it embraces the dish, and is not embraced by it. Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 4, 77: angustoque vagos piscis urgere catino. Rubrum, the common color of pottery.

185

183. cauda thynni: The tunny has a large tail, hence some such adjective as 'taily' is desiderated. Comp. note on 6, 10.—natat: Makes fun of the fish's swimming in the circumstances.—tumet: 'bulges.' The big belly of the jar looks as if it were 'swollen' with wine.

184. labra movet tacitus: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 16, 60: labra movet, metuens audiri (of a prayer to Laverna). A recondite allusion to the secret prayer of the Jews is unlikely.—recutita sabbata = recutitorum sabbata. Comp. OV., Rem. Am., 219, 220: nec te peregrina morentur | sabbata.—palles = pallidus times. G., 329, R. 1; A., 52, 1, a. Comp. our English 'blanch' or 'blench.'

185. tum: As soon as the man has got over his Jewish fright he is assailed by other superstitions.—lemures: 'hobgoblins.' See note on 2, 3. Comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 208: somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, sagas, | nocturnos lemures, portentaque Thessala rides?—ovoque pericula rupto: The Schol. refers these words to the Gr. $\varphi\omicron\sigma\kappa\omicron\mu\kappa\acute{\eta}$ (Jahn). 'The priests used to put eggs on the fire, and observe whether the moisture came out from the side or the top, the bursting of the egg being considered a very dangerous sign.' So Conington, after the Scholiast. Lemures and pericula have no strict grammatical connection. Some supply timentur out of palles, others connect with incussere by Zeugma.

186. grandes galli: JUVENAL'S ingens | semivir (6, 512). The peculiar worship of Cybelé had long been familiar to the Romans.—sistro: The $\sigma\epsilon\iota\sigma\tau\rho\nu$, or 'timbrel,' was peculiar to the service of Isis, which had been imported more recently. On its significance, see PLUT., De Isid. et Osir., p. 376. The vibratory theory of life, with its perpetual sensuous unrest, is no novelty, as some of its eloquent advocates seem to think.—lusca: Why lusca? The priestess is supposed to have been struck blind by Isis, who visited offenders in that way. Comp. OV., Ep. ex P., 1, 1, 53, and JUV., 13, 93: Isis et irato feriat mea lumina sistro. One homely explanation is that the priestess, being one-eyed, had betaken herself to religion in despair of a husband! (Schol.)

186

187. incussere: Gr. Aorist. Comp. 3, 101. The expression, 'strike the gods into you,' after the analogy of incutere metum, terrorem, is the other side of VERGIL'S famous magnum si pectore postit | excussisse deum (Aen., 6, 78).—inflantis: 'who have a way of swelling.' Compare the use of depellentibus for depulsoribus, v. 167. See G., 439.

188. praedictum: 'prescribed.'—alli: The superstitious usage here referred to has not yet been paralleled.

189-91. Last scene of all. Horse-laughter of the muscular military.

189. Dixeris—ridet = si dixeris—ridet. Comp. v. 78.—varicosos: Comp. JUV., 6, 397: varicosus fiet haruspex (from long-standing). Varicose veins would naturally be common with men who were as much on their legs as the soldiers of that day. But as varicare means to stand or walk, as if one had varices, 'to straddle' (QUINT., 11, 3, 125), and as vâricus means 'straddling' (OV., A. A., 3, 304), it seems better to translate varicosos 'straddling' here, always remembering the origin. With the change of quantity, comp. vâcillo and vâcillo (vaccillo), Lachm., Lucret., p. 37.—centurionum: See note on 3, 77.

190. crassum ridet: Comp. subrisit molle, 3, 110.—Pulfennius: Jahn's last. The name is variously written. Notice a similar trouble about a hircosus centurio in CAES., B. G., 5, 44, once Pulfio, now Pulio. Heinrich recognizes a fellow-countryman in Vulfennius (Wulfen).—ingens: Comp. torosa inventus, 3, 86; caloni alto, 5, 95.

191. Graecos: Comp. doctores Graios, 6, 38.—curto: 'clipped.'—licetur: A similar notion is worked out with admirable humor in LUCIAN'S Vitarum Auctio.

SIXTH SATIRE.

THE Sixth Satire is addressed to Caesius Bassus, a friend of PERSIUS. The theme of it is the Proper Use of the Goods of this Life, which takes the personal form of a vindication of the poet's course in preferring moderate enjoyment to mean parsimony or grasping avarice.

ARGUMENT.—Are you by this time snugly ensconced by your Sabine fire? And do the chords of your lyre wake to life at your vigorous touch? O cunning craftsman! in whose song the noble tongue of our sires is set to manly music, while young and old alike feel the play of your sportive wit, which in all its sport never forgets the gentleman (1-6).

While you are yonder, I am in my dear Liguria, where the coast is warm, the sea is wintry but kindly, the rocks bar out the storm, and the shore retreats far inland.

‘Luna’s port—’tis well worth while, good people, to know it.’

This was a saying of Ennius, as he woke up in his senses from his Pythagorean dreams and became plain Quintus, instead of the ‘blind old man of Scio’s rocky isle,’ and a wise saying of that hearty old cock it was (7-11).

Well, here I am, caring nothing for the rabble rout, caring nothing what an ill wind may be getting up for my flock. My neighbor may have a better patch of ground, men of lower birth may be growing rich over me. I will not fret myself into a crooked old man for that, nor dine without a bit of something nice, nor nose out a swindle in the imperfect seal of a flagon of flat wine (12-17).

How men differ in such matters! The very same horoscope may bring forth rights and lefts. Here is one that even on his birthday allows himself only the scantiest and meanest fare. Here is another that eats up, like a spirited lad as he is, a vast estate. For my part, ‘Enjoyment, enjoyment,’ is my motto, although I do not intend to treat my freedmen to turbot, and do not understand the difference between cock-ortolan and hen-ortolan after they are cooked (18-24).

Now this is the way to live, I take it. Up to your harvest, up to the last grain of your garners. What are you afraid of? It is a mere matter of harrowing, and lo! another crop is there (25, 26).

But you say, Mr. Critic, ‘There are claims on one. A friend is shipwrecked, the poor fellow is utterly ruined. One must do something for him.’

Well and good! Sell a piece of land, give the proceeds to the needy friend, and keep him from begging up and down with a pictorial appeal to the benevolent (27-33).

Ay, but what of the heir? He will dock the funeral meats, if you dock the estate. One, sure, would not be stenchful when one’s dead, and your bones will not be perfumed, or the perfumes will be stale or adulterated. One can not expect to diminish one’s property without paying for it. Why, I heard Bestius say of your Greek teachers, from whom you learned this precious wisdom of yours, that ever since this new doctrine came to town the very haymakers have been spoiling their good, wholesome fare by rancid grease.

Well, what of all this—the heir’s neglect and Bestius’s fault-finding—would you fear them beyond the grave? (34-41).

But come, my heir, let us dismiss the critic, and have a quiet chat together. Consider the claims on me. Here comes a glorious piece of news from the Emperor. The Germans have been defeated with great slaughter. A grand triumph is preparing. This is no time to hold back. I am going to bring out a hundred pairs of gladiators in honor of the occasion. Forbid it, if you dare. If you don’t like that, I am going to give largess to the people—none of your vile vetches, but oil and pasties. Do you object? Out with it (42-51).

188

What do you say? ‘My farm is hardly worth having after that.’ Well, if you don’t want it, I can get some of the women to take it; and if there is none of them left, I can go to the next village, and Hodge will accept. ‘A son of earth?’ you say; ‘a nobody?’ Pshaw! If you come to that, I can just remember who my great-great-grandfather was. Two generations further back and I come to a son of earth, a nobody, and Hodge is a relation—a distant relation, but still a relation—a kind of great-great-uncle. Believe me, the Lord No Zoo is father of us all (52-60).

You are an impatient heir, I must say. Why can’t you wait for my shoes until I take them off? I am the God of Fortune to you, just as he is painted in the pictures, with a purse in his hand. Will you take what I leave, and be glad to get it? It falls short; I know it does. But if I have lessened it, it is for myself that I have lessened it, and what is left is all yours. Don’t stop to ask about that old legacy, and serve up a stale dish of fatherly advice. I know how fathers talk. ‘Credit yourself by the interest. Debit yourself by the expenses. What is the remainder?’ Remainder? Fudge! Souse the cabbage, boy. Don’t spare the oil. Am I to dine off cow-heel and turnips on a holiday, that your graceless grandson may stuff himself with pâté de foie gras, and indulge himself in aristocratic connections? Am I to go through the eye of a cambric needle that he may have a priestly paunch? (61-74).

Furthermore, if you are not content with the little that I can leave you, sell your life for gain. Try every trade. Try every nook and corner of the earth. Go to Cappadocia, for instance, where you can make something by dealing in slaves, and become an adept in that dainty business. Double your capital. ‘I have done so. Nay, I have trebled it, quadrupled it, decupled it. Tell me where to draw the line.’ Tell you where to draw the line? Why, Chrysippus himself could not find the limit between wealth and poverty. A dollar more does not make a man rich, a dollar less does not make him poor. Where is the turning-point? And yet this man talks as if the turning-point had been found! (75-80.)

The Sixth Satire is the most obscure and unsatisfactory of the poems of PERSIUS, and baffled interpreters have taken refuge in the hypothesis that the Satire is incomplete. The roughness of the metre and the harshness of the transitions favor this view; but parts are wrought out with all the minuteness of detail that is characteristic of our author’s style, and some of the highest authorities, such as Jahn, consider the Satire complete. The close, as Mr. Pretor remarks, is exactly in PERSIUS’S manner, and we must look elsewhere in the Satire for the breaks—if breaks there be.

189

1-11. Are you spending the winter on your Sabine farm, Bassus, and have you resumed your poetry? I am in my Ligurian resort, so praised by Ennius.

1. iam: in the question implies uncertainty, 'actually?' 'so?'—bruma = brevuma = brevissima (dies), 'the shortest day,' 'winter-solstice,' 'midwinter.'—foco: contrast between the fireside of the land of the Sabines and the open-air warmth of Liguria.—Basse: 'Caesius Bassus, one of the intimate friends of PERSIUS, was deputed by Cornutus to edit his Satires after his death. He is classed with HORACE, as a lyric poet, by QUINTILIAN (10, 1, 96), who, however, thinks him inferior to some of his own contemporaries, and he is probably the same with the author of a treatise on Metres, which is referred to by various grammarians, and still exists in an interpolated epitome, but different from Gabius or Gavius Bassus, who wrote works on the origin and signification of words and on the gods. Bassus was killed, according to the Scholiast, in the famous eruption of Vesuvius' (Conington, after Jahn). See also v. 5.—Sabino: The simplicity of the Sabines has already been noted (see 1, 20), and Jahn thinks that the life about the fireside (VERG., Georg., 2, 532) is an indication of the primitive tastes of Bassus and his family. Sabino also prepares the way for tetrico (below). Comp. tetrica ac tristis disciplina Sabinorum, LIV., 1, 18 (quoted by Jahn).

2. tetrico: 'austere.'—vivunt: PERSIUS was thinking of HORACE'S vivuntque commissi calores | Aeoliae fidibus puellae, Od., 4, 9, 11. 12. Iam vivunt, 'wake to life' (Pretor), where 'wake' represents iam. See note on 5, 33.

3. mire: is an Adjective or an Adverb, according as opifex is a Substantive or an Adjective.—opifex: Commentators supply es, but the Nom. can be used in characteristic exclamation. See G., 340, R. 1, and comp. 1, 5. With opifex intendisse comp. Prol., 11, and egregius lusispe below. For the Perf., see 1, 41, note.—veterum primordia vocum: Perhaps 'the racy richness of our early tongue.' LUCR. (4, 531) uses primordia vocum of the beginnings of articulate sound, as QUINT., 1, 9, 1, uses dicendi primordia of instruction in the rudimentary preparation for rhetoric. Bassus, as the whole context shows, affected to belong to the antiquiores homines, and imitated the diction of an earlier time. PERSIUS belongs to a different school of art, and his friendship makes him guarded. Jahn understands a grammatical poem, of which LUCILIUS furnishes a familiar example in his Ninth Book (see L. Müller's Lucilius, p. 221), but, as Pretor remarks, numeris—marem strepitum fidis intendisse Latinae indicates lyric poetry.

190

4. marem strepitum: like ἄρρην φθόγγος. Comp. HOR., A. P., 402: mares animos.—fidis Latinae: Stress is to be laid on Latinae. PERSIUS himself is intensely Latin in his vocabulary.—intendisse: 'VERG., Aen., 9, 774, speaks of stringing the numbers on the chords; PERSIUS goes further [and fares worse], and talks of stringing sounds on the numbers' (Conington).

5. mox: points to another side of Bassus's poetry, the non-lyrical, probably satires, for one Bassus in satyris, mentioned by FULGENTIUS (ap. Jahn), is most likely our man, despite Jahn's objections.—iocis: Heinrich, ex con. The passage is a very difficult one. The interpretation turns on the two words, iocos (or iocis), senes (or senex), as the reading egregios for egregius may be discarded.

(1.) Jahn reads in both editions (1843 and 1868) iocos and senes.

(2.) Hermann's senex, the reading of Montepess., was enthusiastically advocated by Hermann himself.

(3.) Heinrich's iocis has the merit of making a perfectly clear sense, and is accepted by Mr. Pretor.

(1.) If we read iocos with the MSS., iuvenes must be considered an Adjective, and iuvenes iocos = iuvenilis iocos. This almost compels us to make senes an Adjective also, and the following translation may be given: 'Rare genius for carrying on the frolics of youth [in song], and for giving play with virtuous skill to the jests of the aged.'

(2.) Hermann's reading labors under the difficulty of requiring us to understand senex of Bassus, who was not an old man at the time; but compare the note on praegrandi senes, 1, 124. Notice also the want of balance in the absolute luisse. 'Then showing yourself excellent in your old age at wakening young loves and frolicking over the chords with a virtuous touch' (Conington). Iocus is often used of love. Comp. CATULL., 8, 6: ibi illa multum iocosa fiebant.

191

(3.) Heinrich's iocis gives us, 'Rarely skilled to rally the young with jibe and jest and have a fling at old sinners, but all in high-bred style.' Pollice honesto is the ingenuo ludo of 5, 16. Comp. also 2, 74: generoso honesto; and the honesto oratio of TER., Andr., 1, 1, 114: quae opponitur plebeiae, as Gesner says, s.v. It is hardly necessary to say that the English language has no synonyme for honestus, which embraces the goodly outside as well as the pure heart.

Mr. Conington translates Hermann's text and comments on Jahn's. Luisse senes he understands as amavisse senili more, the poet being said to do the deed he writes about, VERG., Ecl., 9, 19. It would be far more simple to make iocos senes = amores senilis, harsh as that would be. Old men's philanderings are fair game for the satirist or comic poet to have his fling at (luisse). Turpe senilis amor, as the master says, Ov., Am., 1, 9, 4. Compare the Casina of PLAUTUS.—pollice: the cithern being played chiefly with the thumb.

6. luisse: Comp. scit risisse, 1, 132.—mihi: The step-father of PERSIUS probably had a seat there.

7. intepet: The warmth of the coast made it a favorite resort for invalids. It is not unlikely that PERSIUS was a man of delicate constitution.—hibernat: According to some, 'my sea winters,' that is, 'rests for the winter,' is not vexed by the keels of ships (Schol.). According to others, 'is wintry,' like hiemat (the more common word in this sense). A stormy sea was supposed to lash itself warm. Jahn quotes, among other passages, CIC., N. D., 2, 10, 26: maria agitata ventis tepescunt.—meum: 'my sea,' 'my favorite haunt.' Some have inferred falsely from this passage that Luna was the birthplace of PERSIUS.

8. latus dant: 'present their giant side,' 'interpose a mighty barrier' against the winds. Jahn comp. VERG., Aen., 1, 105: undis dat latus.—valle = sinu. The Abl. of manner may be translated locally; 'into a deep bay' (Conington).—se receptat: 'retreats,' 'retires' from the storms. So HORACE (Od., 1, 17, 17; Epod., 2, 11) speaks of a reducta vallis. Jahn refers the frequentative to the windings of the bay. 'Keeps retreating,' 'retreats further and further,' might very well be said from the traveller's point of view. The description of the harbor, now the Gulf of Spezia, is said to be very accurate.

192

9. Lunai portum, etc.: ENNIUS, Ann., v. 16 (Vahl.). Luna, from which the harbor took its name, was not on the gulf, but on the eastern side of the Macra (Magra), near the modern Sarzana.—est operae: Commonly explained by the ellipsis of pretium. But the Gen. is very elastic.—cognoscite: is easier in tone, cognoscere is easier for translation. cives: 'good people all.' Ger. Leutelein. Jahn notices the antiqua grammas of civis.

10. cor Enni: Comp. re-cor-dor and cor-datus, and our 'get by heart.' So credidit meum cor, ENN., Ann., 374 (Vahl.). See MART., 3, 26, 4; 11, 84, 17. The expression is little more than cordatus Ennius, as in the familiar passage, tergemini vis Geryonai, LUCR., 5, 28. So corpore Turni, VERG., Aen., 7, 650; Greek, βία, ἴς, δέμας, στόμα (Ἀνύτης στόμα, ANTHOL. P., 9, 26, 3). On the same principle are based such combinations as mens provida Reguli, HOR., Od., 3, 5, 13, and venit et Crispi iucunda senectus. JUV., 4, 81, and Montani quoque venter adest, l.c. 107. 'Ennius, in his sober moments' (Gifford).—destertuit: On the Tense, see G., 563; A., 62, 2, a. 'Snored off his being,' i.e., the dream that he was Homer. Ennius's dreams are touched up in Prol., 2, where it has been mentioned that Ennius dreamed that he had seen Homer. For the further visions, see the citations in Vahlen's ed. of ENNIUS, Ann., v. 15.

11. Maeonides: poetic 'flash-name,' like the 'Bard of Avon.'—Quintus: 'plain Quintus' (Gifford). The Scholiast fancies that quintus is a numeral, and gives the following order of transmigrations: 1. Pythagoras; 2. A peacock; 3. Euphorbus; 4. Homer. TERTULLIAN gives: 1. Euphorbus; 2. Pythagoras; 3. Homer; 4. A peacock. The pun would be a wretched one, but that is no objection; more serious is the wrong use of the Preposition ex for ab. Heinrich combines confidently Maeonides Quintus, 'Homer with a Roman praenomen.' Conington follows doubtfully.—pavone: Memini me fieri pavum, ENN., Ann., v. 15 (Vahl.).—Pythagoreo: 'Since Pythagoras' time that I was an Irish rat,' SHAKSP.

193

12-17. Here I am in happy unconcern, caring naught for vulgar herd or threatened flock. I do not pine because my neighbor waxes fat. Let who will get up in the world; I won't let my hair turn gray for that, nor stint myself, nor poke my nose into the wax of every jar of wine I open to see whether somebody has not been tampering with the seal.

12. securus: with Gen., VERG., Aen., 1, 350; 10, 326.—quid praeparet auster: Jahn comp. quid cogitet umidus auster, VERG., Georg., 1, 462; and 444: arboribusque satisque Notus pecorique sinister.

13. infelix: with Dat. VERG., Georg., 2, 239: tellus—infelix frugibus, quoted by Conington.—pecori: as it were, doubly dependent.—securus et: The trajection of et (1, 23) gives securus a better position.—angulus: as in O si angulus ille | proximus accedat, HOR., Sat., 2, 6, 8.

14. pinguior: Jahn quotes appositely for the thought, fertilior seges est alienis semper in agris, OV., A. A., 1, 349. So JUV., 14, 142: maiorque videtur | et melior vicina seges.—adeo omnes: The emphasis of adeo may be given by repetition, all, ay, all. The supposition is an extreme one, hence the Subjunctive ditescant. Notice the harsh elision at this point, which is avoided by smoother writers. PERSIUS has it fourteen times in all—eight times in this one Satire—which may be interpreted as an indication of its incompleteness.

15. peioribus: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 6, 22: peioribus ortus. The social sense is the more prominent.—usque = ubi-s-que, 'no matter where or when,' hence 'every where,' and, as here, 'always.'

16. curvus: 'bent double.'—minui: 'lose flesh' (Conington).—senio: before my time. Comp. 1, 26.—uncto: synonymous with 'dainty.' Jahn comp. HOR., A. P., 422, and 3, 102; 4, 17.

17. signum tetigisse: Only good wines were sealed. The miser not only seals up his vile stuff, but, in his anxious scrutiny into the state of the seal, butts his nose against it—perhaps with the additional idea of helping the sense of sight with the sense of smell. Recusem tetigisse = nolim tetigisse. Comp. note on 1, 91.

194

18-24. Others may not agree with me in these views. Even twins born under the same star may be widely different. One gives himself a treat only on his birthday, and a poor treat it is. Another devours his substance before he comes of age. I am for enjoyment, but not for waste; for enjoyment, but not for a subtle discernment of the pleasures of the table.

18. his: On the Dat., see G., 388, R. 1; A., 51, 2, g. His is Neuter. 'These views of mine.'—geminos: Comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 183 seqq.—horoscope: 'natal star,' 'star of nativity.' Comp. note on 5, 46.—varo genio: 'of diverging temper.' Varus is often used of distorted, bowed legs, and varo genio is only PERSIUS's way of saying that the dispositions of twins often go apart.

19. producis: 'bring forth,' 'give birth to,' 'beget,' PLAUT., Rud., 4, 4, 129; PROP., 5, 1, 89

(Conington). Jahn renders it in lucem edit et educat, which is more in conformity with general usage and with the notion of control in the star of nativity.—solis natalibus: This picture has been much admired. Every word tells. This high-day comes but once a year (solis), the cabbage is dry (sine uncto), he does not souse it with oil, as PERSIUS does (ungue, puer, caules, v. 69), but moistens it (tingat) with fish brine (muria), which he has bought—sly fox that he is (vafer)—in a cup (a cupful at a time, to prevent waste), while, with his own hand (ipse)—for he trusts no other—he dusts (inrorans) the platter with the dear, precious pepper, sacred in his eyes (sacrum).

20. muria: was a cheap sauce, 'made of the thynnus, and less delicate than garum, made of the scomber' (Maclean); hence the point of buying it only as he wanted it—a small quantity at a time.—empta: Both Conington and Pretor direct us to combine empta with muria. It can not be combined with any thing else, as calice is rigidly masculine, Neue, Formenl., 1, 691.

21. sacrum: Acerbe dictum quia avarus tamquam sacro parcat (Jahn). Jahn compares ἄλς θεῖος, but has not overlooked the real point, as Mr. Pretor intimates.—inrorans: Comp. instillat in a similar description of a miser (Avidienus), in HOR., Sat., 2, 2, 62.—dente peragit: 'gobbles up' (Conington). Peragere, 'go through,' 'run through.'

22. magnanimus: Ironical, like HOR., Ep., 1, 15, 27: rebus maternis atque paternis | fortiter absumptis. 'High-hearted hero.'—puer: while a mere lad. 'Gifford notices the rapidity of the metre, and contrasts it with the slowness of v. 20.' It would have been more to the purpose if he had noticed the mockery of the position, which suspends the sense. 'He—his property—with nothing but his teeth—his vast estate—heroic being—runs through—while nothing but a boy.'

23. rhombos: It suffices to refer to JUV., Sat., 4.—ponere: 1, 53. For the construction, see Prol., 11.

24. tenuis—salivas: 'delicate juices,' 'subtle flavors.' Saliva = sapor, as in PLIN., H. N., 22, 1, 22: sua cuique vino saliva, by a natural transfer from the consumer to the consumed; or, as Conington puts it, from effect to cause. See 5, 112.—sollers nosse: Prol., 11.—turdarum: 'thrushes,' 'fieldfares,' a well-known delicacy, HOR., Sat., 2, 5, 10; Ep., 1, 15, 41. The Scholiast tells us that the feminine is used for the ordinary masculine, because the Brillat-Savarins of the period undertook to tell the sex by the taste. The difference between turdorum and turdarum reminds one of 'calipash' and 'calipee.'

25-33. The true course is to live fully up to your income and trust to the next crop. 'But suppose an extraordinary demand is made on you. Suppose a friend is shipwrecked.' What easier than to sell a piece of land and relieve his wants?

25. tenuis: here 'fully up to.' Jahn makes tenuis an Adverb, compares VERG., Aen., 1, 737: summo tenuis attigit ore, and explains messe propria vive as = consume fructus agrorum tuorum usque ad finem, quoad suppetunt.—propria: 'Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?'

26. emole: to the last grain.—occa: Comp. HOR., Ep., 2, 2, 161: cum segetes occat tibi mox frumenta daturas.—in herba: 'in the blade.' Ov., Her., 17, 263: adhuc tua messis in herba est. Have something of the farmer's hopeful spirit. Comp. the Gr. proverb: ἀεὶ γεωργὸς εἰς νέωτα πλοῦσιος.

27. ast: 2, 39. An impersonal objector speaks.—officium = τὸ καθήκον, which embraces our charity. The Stoics insisted on χρηστότης, without prejudice to ἀπάθεια. They wanted benevolentia without miseriordia. See Knickenberg, l.c. p. 90. The poet gets the better of the philosopher in PERSIUS.—trabe rupta: Comp. 1, 89.—Bruttia saxa: In the toe of the Italian boot.

28. prendit: Casaubon comp. prensantem que uncis manibus capita aspera montis, VERG., Aen., 6, 360 (of Palinurus).—surdaque vota: Surdus is 'dull of hearing' and 'dull of sound,' 'deaf,' and, as here, 'unheard,' Comp. κωφός, The radical is SVAR, 'heavy;' 'neither his ear heavy that it can not hear.'

29. Ionio: sc. sinu, if we may judge by JUV., 6, 92: lateque sonantem pertulit Ionium. Gr. Ἴόνιος κόλπος. Comp. THUC., 1, 24 with 6, 30. It is used here in a wide sense, as is shown by Bruttia saxa, v. 27. Comp. SERV. ad Aen., 3, 211: sciendum Ionium sinum esse immensum ab Ionia usque ad Siciliam. On the translation and construction of Ionio, see note on Prol., 1.—ipse: the master of the vessel. G., 297, R. 1.

30. de puppe dii: Paintings of the gods. Comp. VERG., Aen., 10, 171: aurato fulgebat Apolline puppis. The gods may have been Castor and Pollux, no unlikely 'sign,' Acts, 28, 11. Ingentes implies the size of the ship and the magnitude of the loss (Jahn). See note on trabe vasta, 5, 141.—obvia mergis: Jahn comp. HOR., Epod., 10, 21: opima quod si praeda eurvo litore | porrecta mergos iuveris. Any large sea-bird will answer, such as 'cormorant.'

31. lacerae: Conington comp. Ov., Her., 2, 45: at laceras etiam puppes furiosa refeci.—et: καὶ, 'if need be.'—caespite vivo: Comp. HOR., Od., 1, 19, 13; 3, 8, 4; 'live sod,' 'green turf.' Here landed property is meant, in contrast to the income, represented by the messis.

32. pictus: See note on 1, 89. 'With his picture' (Conington).—oberret: 'go up and down the country.'—tabula caerulea: 'a sea-green board,' as might be expected from the subject.

33-41. 'But,' resumes the interlocutor, 'your heir will object to your curtailing your property, and not show you the proper respect when you are dead. You can't expect to diminish your property without scath. And, in fact, you philosophers are very much spoken against on account of the bad example you set, the bad influence you have exerted on the common people.'—Well, what of it? Would you care any thing about what was done to you or said of you after you are dead?

The connection is much disputed.

33. cenam funeris: the epulum funebre, the ‘funeral baked meats’ of Hamlet, not the silicernium proper, not the exigua feralis cena patella of Juv., 5, 85, the scanty meal left at the funeral pile for the dis manibus.

34. curtaveris: G., 542; A., 70, 5, b.—urnae: Do not efface the personal conception (G., 344, R. 3; A., 51, N.) by translating ‘put into.’ The urn receives; hence dabit = ‘commit,’ ‘consign.’

35. inodora: Ov., Trist., 3, 3, 69: atque ea (= ossa) cum foliis et a m o m i pulvere misce; Tib., 3, 2, 23 (Jahn).—seu spirent: 5, 3.—cinnama—casiae: On the Plural, see G., 195, R. 6; A., 14, 1, a.—surdum: ‘faint,’ a transfer from hearing to smell. On the construction, see 5, 25.

36. ceraso: This passage is our only authority for the fraudulent admixture. Tr., ‘whether the cinnamon have lost the fragrance of its breath, or cassia be taken in adulteration with cherry-bark.’—nescire puratus: here ‘fully resolved,’ rather than as in 1, 132.

37. tune bona incolumis minuas: In his ed. of 1868 Jahn has followed Sinner’s suggestion, and transposed parts of vv. 37 and 41, so as to read Haec cinere ulterior metuas here, and Tune bona incolumis minuas below, as Hermann had done before him, only Hermann puts the words in the mouth, not of the objector, but of PERSIUS. I am unable to see how either arrangement helps us out of the difficulties of the passage. In his ed. of 1843, Jahn makes tune bona incolumis minuas? the language of the heir, who asks angrily, ‘Do you expect to diminish your property without suffering for it?’ It is rather the language of the objector, who had just told PERSIUS that he would miss a good funeral by curtailing his estate, and who goes on to cite Bestius, as another opponent of this new-fangled philosophy. PERSIUS dismisses this tirade by the single question: ‘What would all this be to you or me after we are dead?’ This gets rid of Bestius as a new speaker. He is quoted by the objector. Mr. Pretor translates: ‘Do you mean to say, Persius, that you would thus break up your property, while hearty and strong, instead of waiting to bequeath it by will on your death-bed?’—incolumis: χαίρων, impune.—et: Others besides the heir are dissatisfied.

—Bestius: the corrector Bestius of Hor., Ep., 1, 15, 37, who is quoted here by the opponent of PERSIUS, as inveighing against doctrines that have taught the lower classes to waste their substance on condiments and spoil their wholesome fare, after the pattern of such gentlemen as PERSIUS. Comp. usque recusem—cenare sine uncto, v. 16, and ungue, puer, caules, v. 69.

198

38. doctores Graios: Comp. 5, 191.—Ita fit: ‘That is the way of it.’—sapere nostrum: 1, 9.—urbi: with venit. Venire with the Dat., like the Greek ἐλθεῖν, on account of the personal interest involved, ‘came’ being = ‘was brought,’ allatum est. See Kühner, A. G., 2, 351, and Weissenborn on Liv., 32, 6, 4.

39. cum pipere et palmis: notoriously foreign productions. Comp. adventus Romam quo pruna et cottona vento, Juv., 3, 83. Palmis = ‘dates.’—nostrum hoc: ‘this new wisdom of our day.’—maris expers: Hor., Sat., 2, 8, 15: Chium maris expers. The explanations are by no means convincing. Maris expers. (1) Not mixed with salt water, which was supposed to be wholesome, as in Horace, l.c. (2) insulum, Heinr., the most simple, ‘foolish philosophy,’ ‘insipid sapience.’ (3) Devoid of manliness (Casaubon). Comp. 1, 103, 104, in which case maris would be a pun, as there is an evident Horatian reminiscence. See Introd., xxiii. But the Horatian passage is itself variously interpreted. (4) The rendering, ‘innocent of the sea,’ i.e., ‘home-grown,’ is in manifest contradiction to the drift of the passage.

40. fenisecae: Type of the rustic laborer. Comp. fossor, 5, 122. Fenisecae, the plebeian spelling for faenisecae, seems more appropriate here.—crasso unguine: They can not get a good article, but they are determined to imitate their betters, and so they take a poor one. With crasso unguine comp. 3, 104: crassis amomis.—vitiarunt pultes: On vitiarunt comp. 2, 65; puls is the national porridge, the farrata olla of 4, 31.

41. cinere ulterior: ‘when you are the other side of the grave’ (comp. 5, 152); περαιτέρω κόνεως (Casaubon).

41-60. PERSIUS turns on his heir: ‘Glorious news has come of a great victory. I wish to celebrate it by games—by largess. Will you forbid it? If you don’t want what is left, let it alone. I can get somebody to take it—some beggar, perhaps, related to me through that son of earth, Adam.’

42. quisquis eris: does not so much show ‘the indifference of PERSIUS himself’ to his successor as the utter lack of real personality in the Satire. See note on 1, 44.—seductor: Comp. 2, 4. Paulum with seductor. Comp. PETRON., 13: seduxit me paululum a turba; and PLAUT., Asin., 5, 2, 75; TER., Eun., 4, 4, 39. The Accusative with the Comparative is rare but sure, Dräger, l.c. § 245, b; for examples with paulum, SIL., 15, 21; STAT., Theb., 10, 938 (Freund).

199

43. o bone, etc.: The only passage in PERSIUS that deals with the political life of his time, the only passage that has any historic force. A keen observer in his narrow sphere, PERSIUS has hit off very happily the features of this droll triumph of Caligula’s. True, he was only seven years old when it took place; but he lost his father when he was six, and yet recalls him vividly, and this parade must have made an abiding impression, whether he saw it or only heard of it. Caligula’s German expedition is recounted in Suet., Calig., 43 seqq.: ‘He ordered a triumph, which was to be unprecedentedly splendid, and cheap in proportion, as he had a right to the property of his subjects—changed his mind, forbade any proposal on the subject under capital penalties, abused the senate for doing nothing, and finally entered the city in ovation on his birthday’ (Conington). With o bone comp. heus bone, 3, 94.—laurus = laureata epistola, the letter bound with bays, in which victories were announced.

44. Germanae pubis: ‘flower of the German army’ (Pretor), pubes being = ἡλικία.

45. aris | frigidus excutitur cinis: Of course to make room for new sacrifices, but frigidus intimates that the ashes had had time to cool; such occasions were rare. Comp. APUL., Met., 4, 83: arae viduae frigido cinere foedatae. Aris, Dat. Excutitur denotes haste. 'The ashes are hustled off.'—postibus: 'for the door-posts' (of temples, palaces, the residence of the triumphator, and other buildings). With the Dative comp. JUV., 6, 51: necte coronam | postibus.

46. lutea gausapa: 'yellow wools.' The coarse fabric known as gausapa was used to make yellow wigs for the mock German captives. The light hair of the Germans is a familiar characteristic, and a similar device is recorded of Domitian by TACITUS, Agr., 39 (Jahn). As the captives were actually Gauls, Casaubon understands gausapa of the common Gallic costume.

200

47. Caesoniam: the mistress, and, after the birth of a daughter and the divorce of Lollia, the wife of Caligula, SUET., Cal., 25.—ingentis Rhenos: Jahn understands statues or pictures of the Rhine, to be carried in procession, referring to the Jordan on the Arch of Titus, and citing Ov., A. A., 1, 223 seqq., for the Euphrates and Tigris. Conington adds VERG., Georg., 3, 28, for the Nile, and considers the Plural Rhenos sarcastic. The more common interpretation regards Rhenos as Rhenanos. SUET., l.c. 47, mentions expressly the fact that Caligula picked out the tallest men he could find (procerissimum quemque) for the procession.

48. genioque ducis: On genio, see 2, 3. The genius of the Emperor was publicly worshipped, Ov., Fast., 5, 145. Caligula punished those who did not swear by his genius, SUET., Cal., 27. Ducis is sarcastic. 'So JUV., 4, 145; 7, 21, calls Domitian dux, with reference to a similar exploit, a sham triumph with manufactured slaves' (Conington, after Jahn).—centum paria: Comp. HOR., Sat., 2, 3, 85: ni sic fecissent gladiatorum dare centum | damnati populo paria atque epulum. The number is absurd for any ordinary fortune, and the extravagance of the threat destroys the dramatic effect on the heir.

49. induco: The familiar Present for the Future. Induco, verbum harenae (Casaubon).—aude: We should say, 'I dare you' (Conington).

50. oleum: Largesses of oil by Caesar and Nero are recorded by SUET., Caes., 38, Nero, 12 (Jahn).—artocreas: ἀρτόκρεας = visceratio, 'bread-meat' for 'bread-and-meat.' Outside of the numerals, such copulative compounds (dvandva in Sanskrit) are rare, and chiefly late. Comp. suovetaurilia, νυχθήμερον, the famous word of seventy-nine syllables in AR., Eccl., 1169, and Mod. Gr. ἀνδρόγυνον, 'man-and-wife.' Some consider artocreas a kind of meat-pasty.—popello: 4, 15.

51, 52. dic clare: It were very much to be wished that he had. The context seems to require, on the one hand, a motive for the silence of the heir; on the other, a motive for declining the inheritance. The interpretation of non adeo—iuxta est depends on the meaning of exossatus, which is sometimes rendered 'exhausted,' 'impoverished,' 'worn out,' as if 'boneless' and 'marrowless' were the same thing here; sometimes, and with far more probability, 'cleared of stones.' A poetic allusion to the 'bones of Mother Earth,' Ov., Met., 1, 393 seqq. (Schol.), would be out of place, and the common culinary sense of exossatus, 'boned,' is in keeping with the homely character of PERSIUS's tropes. Adeo is sometimes considered a Verb, in the sense of adire hereditatem; sometimes an Adverb, and connected now with prohibeo (from prohibes), now with exossatus; and, finally, some give exossatus—est to the heir, others to PERSIUS. I subjoin the chief distributions and interpretations:

201

- (1.) Non adeo, inquis. Exossatus ager iuxta est. Jahn (1843). (Do you mean to hinder me? Out with it.) 'Not exactly,' you say. Here is a worn-out field hard by. If you won't have it, another will.
- (2.) 'Non adeo,' inquis? Exossatus ager iuxta est (Conington). You won't accept the inheritance, you say? Here is a field, now, cleared for ploughing.
- (3.) 'Non adeo,' inquis, 'exossatus ager iuxta est,' Jahn (1868), which may be rendered, 'I am sure that your land here is not in such very good order' (that you can afford such extravagance). Good order or not, I can find some one to take it off my hands, etc.
- (4.) Hermann bases his interpretation on the Schol., and understands non adeo exossatus ager to be a field that is not wholly cleared of stones, to which the heir points as a cogent argument against his making a difficulty. He is afraid of a stoning from the people, as above he was afraid of doing any thing to disoblige the Emperor (Lect. Pers., II., 64).
- (5.) Teuffel agrees with Hermann's interpretation of exossatus, but separates non adeo, 'Not exactly.' See (1.). 'There is a field hard by from which the stones have [just] been dug up,' where they are lying in convenient heaps.
- (6.) Heinrich takes adeo to be the Verb, exossatus as 'impoverished,' and iuxta = paene.
- (7.) Non adeo, inquis. Exossatus ager iuxta est is rendered by Mr. Pretor, 'I can't quite forbid it; but let me suggest to you that your land is impoverished.'
- (8.) König understands the heir to say: 'I will not accept. I have a well-tilled piece of land of my own hard by.'

202

I am not ashamed to acknowledge that the only point about which I am convinced is the impossibility of making exossatus mean 'impoverished.'

53. amitis: Amita is the aunt by the father's side. See note on 2, 31. PERSIUS left his property to his mother and sister, and all this string of suppositions is in keeping with the impersonal character of his heir. Teuffel notices the utter jumble of legal relations.—proneptis patru: 'female cousin twice removed.'

54. sterilis vixit: ‘has lived barren’ means ‘has died childless, without issue.’

55. nihilum: ‘neither chick nor child.’—Bovillas: Bovillae lay between Rome and Aricia, and was the first stage on the Appian road, hence called ‘suburban’ by Ov., Fast., 3, 667 (Jahn). PERSIUS had an estate in the neighborhood.

56. clivum ad Virbi: MARTIAL’S clivus Aricinus (2, 19, 3; 12, 32, 10), a noted station for beggars. JUV., 4, 17: dignus Aricinos qui mendicaret ad axes. Virbius was identified with Hippolytus, and worshipped as the hero of Aricia.—Manius: a typical beggar’s name. There was a proverb: multi Mani Ariciae, FEST., s.v., with the explanation, multos claros viros ibi fuisse. The ‘Arician aristocracy’ must have become a term of contempt by the time of PERSIUS (πάλαι ποτ’ ἦσαν ἄλκιμοι Μιλήσιοι).

57. progenies terrae: is the indignant remonstrance of the heir, progenies terrae being = the more familiar terrae filius, CIC., Att., 1, 13, 4 al.; our ‘groundling’ can answer only as a play on the word.—quartus pater = abavus, ‘great-great-grandfather.’

58. haud prompte, dicam tamen: μόλις μὲν, ἔξερῶ δ’ ὅμως (Conington); μόλις μὲν, ἀλλ’ οὖν ἔξερῶ Comp. [DEM.] 58, 26.—adde etiam unum = atavum, ‘one step further back.’

59. unum etiam = tritavum.

60. ritu | generis: ‘by regular descent’ (Conington). Jahn connects generis with avunculus.—maior avunculus: avii aut aviae avunculus est (Jahn), ‘great-great-uncle.’ PERSIUS qualifies this statement by prope, ‘something like,’ but he has not only got the degree wrong, but has passed over to the mother’s side. The thought of this frigidiuscula ratio, as Jahn calls it, does not need illustration. Still, comp. JUV., 4, 99: unde fit ut malim fraterculus esse gigantum.—exit = evadit, 1, 45; 5, 130.

203

61-74. PERSIUS: ‘You are getting impatient. Why not wait for your turn? I am Fortune. Wait until I drop my purse into your hand, and then be satisfied with what I have left in it. Tadius bequeathed me some money. I know he did. What is that to you? None of your fatherly advice about looking after my balance at the banker’s. What do I care about “balance?” I will eat a good dinner, and not starve myself for your spoilt grandson’s sake.’

61. qui prior es: In this form of the λαμπαδηφορία ‘the course was marked out in stations, at each of which a new set of runners stood ready to take up the race, and so long as the torch remained alight, and the conditions of the race were thus fulfilled, it could not exchange hands except at particular stations’ (Pretor, after Jahn). Here the man in advance is represented as trying to get the torch out of PERSIUS’S hands before he has reached the station, while PERSIUS is yet running (in decursu), which Jahn properly emphasizes. The interpretation is much disputed.—poscis: implies impatience.

62. Mercurius: See note on 2, 11.

63. pingitur: Ἐρμῆς κερδῶος, ‘with money-bag in hand.’ Comp. AR., Ach., 991, 992: πῶς ἂν ἐμὲ καὶ σέ τις ἔρωξ ξυναγάγοι λαβῶν, | ὥσπερ ὁ γεγραμμένος, ἔχων στέφανον ἀνθέμων.—vin tu gaudere relictis: Gaudere here almost = ἀγαπᾶν, ‘be thankful for whatever I shall leave you.’ According to the ordinary rules of grammar, vis would be the rhetorical, vin the genuine form of the question (G., 455), but ne can not be pinned down by strict rules, as has been remarked. See note on 1, 22.

64. dest aliquid summae: may be an objection of the heir, or an anticipated objection. PERSIUS often reminds us of Mrs. Caudle.—minui mihi: It was mine, and I diminished it to suit myself. It was mine to lessen; what is left will be all your own to keep.

65. fuge quaerere = noli quaerere, as in HOR., Od., 1, 9, 13.

204

66. neu: 3, 51.—repone: ‘dish up again;’ the paterna dicta may be considered a crambe repetita. Comp. QUINT., 2, 4, 29: cum eadem iudicii pluribus dicunt, fastidium movent velut frigidi et repo siti cibi. PERSIUS is nothing if not culinary. Jahn (1868) reads: opponere, which is clearer but tamer. Paterna d. is simply ‘the talk one hears from fathers,’ severe old gentlemen on the stage.

67. faenoris—reliquum est: clearly a specimen of fatherly counsel. Every Polonius has something to say to his Laertes on this subject (Hamlet, 1, 3). PERSIUS’S Polonius advises his son to keep an account, enter (accedat = apponatur, see note on 2, 2) his interest on the credit side, charge his expenses to the debit side, and find the remainder—in other words, to live carefully within the income of his property. Before the old gentleman gets through, PERSIUS repeats his last word mockingly: ‘Remainder? Hang the remainder.’ This is also Conington’s view, who compares the commercial arithmetic lesson in HOR., A. P., 327 seqq.—merces: HOR. uses merces alone in the same sense as faenoris merces here, Sat., 1, 2, 14, 3, 88.—hinc: from the capital, or from the interest, or from both. I am inclined to refer hinc to the side of the account.

69. ungue caules—festa luce: See note on v. 19.

70. urtica: Comp. HOR., Ep., 1, 12, 7: abstemius herbis | vivis et urtica; and Sat., 2, 2, 117: holus fumosae cum pede pernae (Jahn).—sinciput: ‘pig’s cheek.’ The swine was the common sacrifice and the common dish.—aure: Fissa aure seems to be nothing more than a picturesque detail. The pig’s head was bung up in the smoke by a slit in its ear.

71. tuus iste nepos: Mr. Pretor sees a trace of incompleteness in the mention of tuus iste nepos, ‘whose existence has never before been hinted at.’ The nepos is hauled up out of the inane like the quisquis heir himself.—anscris extis: Comp. JUV., 5, 114: anseris ante ipsum magni

73. patriciae: implies great expense. This coarse combination of sensual pleasures is an argument in favor of the old-fashioned interpretation of Calliroen, 1, 134.—trama: Fr. trame, 'woof.' Such terms are apt to stick. Others translate falsely 'warp.' 'Trama figurae is "a thread-paper figure," as trama is the thread of the woof, which crosses that of the upright stamen or warp, and when the nap is worn off the cloths, these threads are laid bare.' Stocker, quoted by Pretor.

74. tremat: 'quiver,' like jelly, 'wag.'—omento: 'fatty caul,' 'fat,' 2, 47.—popa: used as a Substantive. Comp. Prol., 13. 'Alderman-belly,' instead of an 'aldermanic belly.' 'They which waited at the altar'—for the popae were the priests' assistants—'were partakers with the altar' (1 Cor., 9, 13), and waxed fat on the iunicum omenta. Pretor quotes PROP., 4, 3, 62: succinctique calent ad nova lucra popae.

75-80. Commentators notice the abrupt transition. Jahn says that the dialogue is dropped, but who expects invariably close connection between two heads of a sermon? In my judgment PERSIUS is still hammering away at his impatient heir, and bids him earn money for himself, if he is not content to wait for PERSIUS's death, and does not like PERSIUS's mode of living. 'Sell your life, ransack the world, drive every trade. Double, treble, quadruple, decuple your property. But you will find that there is no point where you can stop, where you will be rich enough.'

75. vende animam lucro: Casaubon comp. the Greek proverb: θανάτου ὄνιον τὸ κέρδος, and LONGIN., Sublim., 44: τὸ ἐκ τοῦ παντὸς κερδαίνειν ὠνούμεθα τῆς ψυχῆς.—excute: (for the last time of eight) 'ransack.'

76. latus mundi: HOR., Od., 1, 22, 19 (Conington).—nec = neu. See 1, 7.

77. Cappadocas: The slaves of Cappadocia were, as a rule, tall and well grown (PETRON., 63), and good litter-bearers (MART., 6, 77, 4) (Jahn), but in other respects extremely undesirable cattle.—rigida: 'fixed upright.' Rigida e columnae, Ov., Fast., 3, 529 (Jahn).—plausisse: So Jahn (1868). In 1843 he edited pavisse, and comp. quot pascit servos? JUV., 3, 141, and other passages. But pavisse may have been intended as a Third Conjugation Perf. from pāvio, and hence = plausisse. So Longfellow uses 'dove' for 'dived.' Slaves were slapped to try their condition. On the Inf. and the Perfect, see opifex intendisse, v. 3, note.—catasta: 'platform.' The sense of the passage, 'Make yourself an expert in slave flesh.'

78. feci—sistam: words of the avaricious man. The passage is imitated from HOR., Ep., 1, 6, 34: mille talenta rotudentur, totidem altera, porro | tertia succedant et quae pars quadret acervum.—quarto: as if he had written ter before.

79. redit: the regular word for 'income,' 'revenue.' Comp. reditus.—rugam: Ruga = sinus, 'fold in a garment.' The sinus answers to our 'pocket,' hence 'purse.' The ruga, then, is the rugosum marsupium (Heinrich), or the 'yet unfilled bosom' of JUV., 14, 327. 'It comes into a purse that wrinkles still.' To bring this out more clearly Mr. Paley (ap. Pretor) puts a semicolon after decians.—depunge: So Jahn (1868) for his previous depinge. 'Prick a hole.'—ubi sistam: G., 469, 623; A., 67, 2, b.

80. inventus: Ironical. 'So some one has been found, Chrysippus, to mark the limit of your heap.' If you can find a man to put a bound to greed, you can find a man to solve the sorites of Chrysippus. The fallacy called the σωρείτης, or σωριτης, Lat. acervus, is often mentioned; so in HOR., Ep., 2, 1, 47, where it is illustrated by pulling hair after hair from the tail of a horse, and taking year after year from the age of a poet. See Hamilton's Lectures on Logic, p. 268 (Am. ed.).

CRITICAL APPENDIX.

The first reading is the reading of this edition, which, in the absence of any statement to the contrary, coincides with Jahn's edition of 1868. Variations in spelling have been noted where they have been deemed instructive.

J^α. = Jahn, ed. of 1843.
J^ω. = " " 1868.
J. = " both editions.
H. = Hermann (1854).

PROLOGUS.

2. Parnaso: Parnasso, H. —4. Heliconidas: Heliconiadas, J^α., H. —5. remitto: relinquo, J^α. —7. adfero: affero, J^α., H. —8. chaere: χαῖρε, J^α., H. —9. picam: picas, J^α. —nostra verba: verba nostra, H. —12. refulserit: J^α.; refulgeat, J^ω., H.

SATURA I.

6. examenque: examenve, J^α., H. —8. nam Romae quis non: nam Romae est quis non, J^α —a:

ac, J^α.; ah, H. —9. tum: tunc, J^α., H. —11. tunc, tunc, ignoscite —‘Nolo:’ J^α.; tunc, tunc — ignoscite, nolo, J^ω., H. —12. splene cachinno: splene —cachinno, H. —14. quod: J^α., H.; quo, J^ω. —17. leges: legens, J^α., H. —19. nec: neque, J^α. —32. circa: circum, J^α. —umeros: humeros, J^ω., H. —hyacinthia: hyacinthina, J^α., H. —35. supplantat: subplantat, J^ω. —36. adsensere: assensere, J^α., H. —57. protenso: propenso, J^α. —60. Apula: Appula, H. —tantae: tantum, Heinrich, Conington. —66. derigat: dirigat, J^α., H. —69. adferre: afferre, J^α., H. —74. cum: J^α.; quem, J^ω., H. —dictatorem: dictaturam, H. —76. Acci: Atti, J^α. —78. fula: fula? H. —82. exsultat: J^α., H.; exultat, J^ω. —88. men moveat? quippe et: men moveat quippe et, J^α., H. —89. protulerim: protulerim? J^α., H. —91. querela: J^α., Brambach; querella, J^ω., H. —93. cludere: claudere, J^α., H. —95. Appennino: Apennino, J^α. —97. vegrandi: praegrandi, H. —102. euhion: evion, J^α. —111. omnes, omnes: omnes etenim, J^α. —114. meite: meiite, J^α., H. —119. nec cum scrobe? nusquam? nec cum scrobe, nusquam? J^ω., H.; nec cum scrobe? ‘nusquam.’ J^α. —130. heminas: J^α., H.; eminas, J^ω.

208

SATURA II.

5. libabit: libavit al. —9. murmurat: immurmurat, J^α. —10. ebulliat: ebullit Cod. Montepessulanus. —14. conditur: ducitur, J^α. —pro: proh, J^α. —16. purgas? purgas, J^α. —25. sulphure: sulfure, J^α., H. —37. optet: optent al. —42. grandes: J^α., H.; pingues, J^ω. —tucceta: tuceta, J^α. —43. adnuere: annuere, J^α. —45. arcessis: accersis, H. —47. flammis: flamma, J^α. —48. et tamen: ac tamen, J^α.; at tamen, H. —52. creterras: crateras, J^α. —54. excutiat: excutias, J^α., H. —61. terris: terras al. —caelestium: coelestium, J^α., H. —inanes: J^α., H.; inanis, J^ω. At vid. Ritschel. Prolegg. Trinum., xc.; Neue, Formenl., 1, 257. —62. quid iuvat hoc: quid iuvat, hos, H. —66. bacam: baccam, J^α., H. —73. animo: animi, H.

SATURA III.

11. harundo: arundo, J^α., H. —12. querimur: queritur, J^α. —umor: humor, J^α., H. —13. quod: J^α., H.; sed, J^ω. —14. querimur: queritur, J^α. —15. hucine: huccine, J^α., H. —17. pappare: papare, J^α. —29. censoremne: Casaubon.; censoremque, J^ω.; censoremve, J^α., H. —31. Nattae? J^α., H.; Nattae, J^ω. —32. vitio et: om. et H. —46. discere non sano: dicere et insano, H. —48. iure: (:): J^α., H.; iure etenim, J^ω. —53. bracatis: braccatis, H. —56. diduxit: deduxit, H. —58. adhuc: adhuc? J^α. —59. malis!: malis? J^α. —60. in quod: in quo, H. —68. qua: quam, H. —73. nec: neque, J^α. —76. mena: maena, J^α. —78. quod sapio satis est mihi: quod satis est sapio mihi, J^α., H. —89. alitus: halitus, J^α., H. —92. lagoena: lagena, J^α., H. —93. rogabit: rogavit, J^α. —94. istuc: istud, J^α., H. —99. sulphureas exalante: sulfureas exhalante, J^α., H. —mefites: mephites, J^α. —100. triental: J^α.; trientem, J^ω., H. —105. rigidas: rigidos, J^α. —112. holus: olus, J^α., H.

209

SATURA IV.

3. hoc: o, H. —9. hoc puta: hoc, puta, H.; puto, Heinr. —13. theta: theta? H. —19. exspecta: exspecta, J^ω. —20. —suffla: sufla, J^ω. —26. miluus errat: milvus oberret, J^α.; milvus oberrat, H. —31. farrata olla: farratam ollam, J^α., H. —35. hi mores: in mores, J^α. —38. exstat: extat, J^ω. —48. venit amarum: H.; venit, amarum, J^ω.; venit amorum, J^α. —sed mox paenituit. Vid. Prolegg., 193, 1.

SATURA V.

3. maesto: moesto, J^α., H. —8. Prognis: Procnes, H. —9. cenanda: coenanda, J^α., H. —13. scloppo: stloppo, J^α., H. —17. dicis: dicas, J^α., H. —19. bullatis: pullatis, J^α.; ampullatis proposuit J. —24. dinoscere: dignoscere, J^α. —35. deducit: J^α., H.; diducit, J^ω. —38. apposita: J^α., H.; adpos., J^ω. —58. cheragra: chiragra, J^α. —66. ‘cras hoc fiet.’ Idem cras fiet: cras hoc fiet idem —Cras fiet? H. —68. consumpsimus: consumpsimus, J^α. —71. cantum: canthum, J^α., H. —76. tressis: J^α., H.; tressis, J^ω. —82. pillea: pilea, J^α., H. —102. navem: navim, J^α. —105. speciem dinoscere: specimen dignoscere, J^α. —110. astringas: adstringas, J^α. —112. glutto: gluto, J^α. —117. sub: J^α., H.; in, J^ω. —119. exsere: J^α., H.; exere, J^ω. —122. cetera: caetera, J^α. —123. tris: tres, H. —satyrum: satyri, J^α. —127. ‘cessas nugator:’ J^α.; cessas nugator, J^ω., H. Vid. Comment. —131. erilis: herilis, J^α., H. —132. heia: eia, J^α. —135. hebenum: ebenum, J^α., H. —136. ex: e, J^α. —camelo: J^α., H.; camello, J^ω. —138. varo: J^α.; baro, J^ω., H. —142. ni: nisi, J^α., H. —145. exstinxerit: J^α., H.; extinxerit, J^ω. —146. transilias: transsilias, J^α. —147. cena: coena, J^α., H. —148. exalet: exhalet, J^α., H. —149. nummi: J^α.; nummos, J^ω., H. —150. pergant avidos sudare: J^α.; peragant avido sudore, J^ω., H. —155. huncine: huncine, J^α., H. —159. et tamen: ac tamen, J^α.; ast tamen, H. —163. adrodens: abrodens, J^α. —165. obscenum: obscoenum, J^α. —172. nec nunc: ne nunc, J^α. —arcessat: accersar, H.; arcessor al. —174. exieras: exieris al. —nec nunc: ne nunc, J^α. —190. Pulfennius: Fulfennius, J^α.

210

SATURA VI.

5. iocis: Heinr. ex conii; iocos, J., H., Codd. —6. egregius: egregios al. —senes: senex, H. —16. cenare: coenare, J^α., H. —17. lagoena: lagena, J^α., H. —20. tingat: J^α., H., Bramb.; tinguat, J^ω. —holus: olus, J^α., H. —empta: emta, J^α., H. —24. tenuis salivas: tenuem salivam, J^α. —30. dii: Brambach; dei, J., H. —31. caespite: Brambach; cespite, J., H. —33. cenam: coenam, J^α., H.

—34. negleget: negliget, J^α, H. —37. tune bona incolumis minuas: J^α; haec verba et v. 41 verba haec —metuas transposuit Sinnerus quem secuti sunt J^ω. et H. —40. fenisecae: faenisecae, J^α; foenisacae, H. —50. conives: connives, J^α, H. —51. inquis: inquis, J^α. —64. dest: deest, J^α, H. —66. Tadius: Stadius J^α. —repone: J^α, H.; opponere, J^ω. —67. faenoris: Brambach; fenoris, J^ω; foenoris, J^α, H. —sumptus: sumtus, J^α. —69. ungue: unge, J^α. —coquetur: coquatur, J^α, H. —77. plausisse: pavisse, J^α. —79. depunge: depinge, J^α, H.

INDEX.

211a

A.

- abaco, 1, 131.
 abavus, 6, 57 (note).
 Ablative in i, 1, 62. 83.
 not necessarily locative, Prol., 1; 2, 35; 6, 8. accerso, 2, 45.
 Acci, 1, 76.
 accipio, 5, 87.
 Accusative cognate, Prol., 14; 1, 11. 106; 3, 59. 110; 4, 34; 5, 25. 106. 123. 190; 6, 35.
 for abl., 6, 42.
 acerra, 2, 5.
 aceti morientis, 4, 32.
 aceto lotus, 5, 86.
 acre despuat, 4, 34.
 acre servitium, 5, 127.
 acri iunctura, 5, 14.
 actus teneat, 5, 99.
 ad, 5, 123.
 adductis amicis, 3, 47.
 adeo, 6, 14. 51.
 adferre sensus, 1, 69.
 adflate, 1, 123.
 Adjective for Subst., 1, 107; 2, 74; 3, 52. admissus, 1, 117.
 admovere templis, 2, 75.
 adnuere his, 2, 43.
 adrodens, 5, 163.
 adsensere viri, 1, 36.
 adsigna tabellas, 5, 81.
 adsonat, 1, 102.
 adverso, ex adv. dicere, 1, 44.
 Aegaeum rapere, 5, 142.
 aegroti veteris, 3, 83.
 211b Aegyptus, sons of, 2, 56 (note).
 aenos fratres, 2, 56.
 aequali Libra, 5, 47.
 aera invenci, 3, 39.
 Saturnia, 2, 59.
 aerumnis, 1, 78.
 aerumnosi, 3, 79.
 agaso, 5, 76.
 agedum, 2, 22.
 ager exossatus, 6, 52.
 agitare iocos (?), 6, 5.
 Ague, semitertian, 3, 91.
 ait (indef. person), 1, 40.
 alba, 1, 110.
 albata, 2, 40.
 albo ventre, 3, 98.
 albus cum sardonynche, 1, 16.
 timor, 3, 115.
 Alcibiades, 4, 3 (note).
 alea, 5, 57.
 algente catino, 3, 111.
 alges, 3, 115.
 aliquid, 3, 60; 5, 137.
 aliquis, 3, 8.
 alitus gravis, 3, 89.
 Aorist descriptive, 3, 101; 5, 187.
 gnomic, 2, 5.
 infinitive, 1, 132; 2, 66; 5, 33; 6, 77.
 aperto voto, 2, 7.
 ἀποτρόποισι δαίμοσι, 5, 167.
 Appennino, 1, 95.
 apponit annos, 2, 2.
 apposita regula, 5, 38.
 apricatio, 4, 18. 19. 33 (note).
 aprici senes, 5, 179.
 aptius, 1, 45.
 Apula canis, 1, 60.
 aqualiculus, 1, 57.
 arator peronatus, 5, 102.
 aratra, 1, 75.
 aratro, 4, 41.
 Arcadiae pecuaria, 3, 9.
 Arcesilas, 3, 79.
 arcessat, 5, 172.
 arcessis, 2, 45.
 arcum dirigere, 3, 60.
 argenti creterras, 2, 52.
 seria, 2, 10.
 argento modus, 3, 69.
 Aricia, 6, 56 (note).
 aris excutere, 6, 44.
 aristas excutere, 3, 115.
 Aristophanes, 1, 124 (note).
 arma virum, 1, 96.
 Arreti, 1, 130.
 ars = philosophia, 5, 105.
 articulos fregerit, 5, 59.
 artifex ponere, 1, 71.
 sequi, Prol., 11.
 artificem vultum, 5, 40.
 artis magister, Prol., 10.
 artocreas, 6, 50.
 asini, 1, 121.
 asper nummus, 3, 69.
 ast, 2, 39.
 astringas, 5, 110.
 Astrology, 5, 46 (note).
 astutam vulpem, 5, 117.
 at, 1, 28; 5, 62.
 atavus, 6, 58 (note).
 atque (after compar.), 5, 131.
 Atti, 1, 50.
 Attis, 1, 93. 105.
 Attribute for effect, Prol., 4; 1, 17. audaci Cratino, 1, 123.
 aude, 6, 49.
 auratis laquearibus, 3, 40.
 aure vaporata, 1, 126.
 aurem lotus, 5, 86.
 aures bibulas, 4, 50.
 auriculas albas, 1, 59.
 asini, 1, 121.
 emere, 2, 30.
 radere, 1, 108.
 auro ovato, 2, 55.

212b

alli caput, 5, 188.
 ambages succinis, 3, 20.
 ambiguum iter, 5, 34.
 ambitio cretata, 5, 177.
 amitis, 6, 53.
 amomis crassis, 3, 104.
 amplexa catinum, 5, 182.
 an, 1, 41.
 anceps, 4, 11; 5, 156.
 anguis duos, 1, 113.
 angulus, 6, 13.
 anhelio, 1, 14; 5, 10.
 animae pars, 5, 23.
 animam vende, 6, 75.
 anne, 3, 39.
 anseris exta, 6, 71.
 ante boves, 1, 74.
 Anticyras, 4, 16.
 Antiopa, 1, 78.
 antithetis rasis, 1, 86.
 anus, 4, 19.

B.

bacam conchae, 2, 66.
 balanatum, 4, 37.
 balba nare, 1, 33.
 balnea, 5, 126.
 balteus, 4, 44.
 barba aurea, 2, 58.
 barbatus magister, 4, 1.
 Bassaris, 1, 101.
 Bassus Caesius, 6, 1 (note).
 Bathylli, 5, 123.
 Baucis, 4, 21.
 beatulus, 3, 103.
 belle, 1, 49.
 bellum (adj.), 1, 87.
 bene, 1, 111; 4, 30.
 Berecynthius, 1, 93.
 Bestius, 6, 37.
 beta, 3, 114.
 bibulas aures, 4, 50.
 bicipiti Parnaso, ProL., 2. bicolor membrana, 3, 10.
 bidental, 2, 27.
 bile acri, 2, 14.
 commota, 4, 6.
 bilis mascula, 5, 144.
 vitrea, 3, 8.
 Birthday, 2, 1.
 bis terque, 2, 16.

C.

caballino fonte, ProL., 1.
 cachinno, 1, 12.
 cachinnos ingeminare, 3, 87.
 caeco occipiti, 1, 62.
 caecum vulnus, 4, 44.
 caedimus, 4, 42.
 caelestium inanes, 2, 61.
 caerulea tabula, 6, 33.
 caepe tunicatum, 4, 31.
 caeso bove, 2, 44.
 Caesonia, 6, 47.
 caespitè vivo, 6, 31.
 Calabrum vellus, 2, 65.
 calamo, 3, 12, 19.
 calcaverit, 2, 38.
 calces extendit, 3, 105.
 gender of, ib.
 calet, 3, 108.
 calice, 6, 20.
 calidae turbae, 4, 7.
 calidum sumen, 1, 53.
 triental, 3, 100.
 Caligula, 6, 43 (note).

pingui, 2, 52.
 subaerato, 5, 106.
 auster infelix, 6, 12.
 aut and an, 5, 5.
 avaritia, 5, 132.
 avia, 2, 31.
 avias veteres, 5, 92.
 avunculus maior, 6, 60.
 axe secundo, 5, 72.

 Blaesus Pedius, 1, 85 (note).
 blandi comites, 5, 32.
 blando popello, 4, 15.
 bombis, 1, 99.
 bona mens, 2, 8.
 pars, 2, 5.
 bone, 3, 94; 6, 43.
 βοθυτεῖν, 2, 44.
 bove caeso, 2, 44.
 Bovillas, 6, 55.
 bracatis Medis, 3, 53.
 Brisaei, 1, 76.
 Bruto liberior, 5, 85.
 bruma, 6, 1.
 Bruttia saxa, 6, 27.
 buccas tumidas, 5, 13.
 bulla donata, 5, 31.
 bullatis nugis, 5, 19.
 bullit, 3, 34.
 buxum torquere, 3, 51.

Chrysippus, 6, 80.
 cicer, 5, 177.
 ciconia, 1, 58.
 cicuta, 4, 2; 5, 145.
 Cincinnatus, 1, 73 (note).
 cinere ulterior, 6, 41.
 cinis, 5, 152.
 cinis frigidus, 6, 45.
 cippus, 1, 37.
 cirratorum, 1, 29.
 citius, 5, 95.
 citreis lectis, 1, 53.
 cives, 6, 9.
 cladem, 6, 44.
 clamare sese, 2, 23.
 clauso murmure, 5, 11.
 Cleanthea fruge, 5, 64.
 clivum Virbi, 6, 56.
 cludere versum, 1, 93.
 Coa lubrica, 5, 135.
 cocta fidelia, 3, 22.
 cognatis siccis, 5, 164.
 colligis = συλλογίζει, 5, 85.

212a

213a

213b

214b

callem surgentem, 3, 57.
 calles, 4, 5.
 callidus, 5, 14.
 suspendere naso, 1, 118.
 Calliroen, 1, 134.
 caloni, 5, 95.
 calve, 1, 56.
 camelo sitiante, 5, 136.
 Camena hortante, 5, 21.
 camino coquitur, 5, 10.
 campo indulgere, 5, 57.
 candelae, 3, 103.
 candidus dies, 2, 2.
 umbo, 5, 33.
 canem cave, 1, 109 (note).
 canicula, 3, 5.
 damnosa, 3, 49.
 canina littera, 1, 109.
 canis (capillis), 5, 65.
 canis Apula, 1, 60.
 cano capiti, 1, 83.
 canitiem, 1, 9.
 cannabe, 5, 146.
 cantare ocima, 4, 22.
 nectar, Prol., 14.
 cantum, 5, 71.
 capedines, 2, 59 (note).
 capillis positus, 3, 10.
 capite et pedibus, 5, 18.
 induto, 3, 106.
 obstipo, 3, 80.
 capiti cano, 1, 83.
 Cappadocas, 6, 77.
 caprificus, 1, 25.
 caput alli, 5, 188.
 laxum, 3, 58.
 carbone notare, 5, 108.
 carere culpa, 3, 33.
 carmen robustum, 5, 5.
 carpamus dulcia, 5, 151.
 casia, 2, 64; 6, 36.
 casses artos, 5, 170.
 castigare examen, 1, 7.
 castoreum, 5, 135.
 catasta, 6, 77.
 catenae, 5, 160.
 catino, 3, 111.
 catinum rubrum, 5, 182.
 Catonis morituri, 3, 45.
 caudam iactare, 4, 15.
 caules ungue, 6, 69.
 cansas rerum, 3, 66.
 cautus dinoscere, 5, 24.
 cedo, 2, 75.
 cedro, 1, 42.
 celsa sede, 1, 17.
 cena funeris, 6, 33.
 cenanda, 5, 9.
 censen, 5, 168.
 censorem tuum, 3, 29.
 centenas voces, 5, 26.
 centeno gutture, 5, 6.
 centum voces poscere, 5, 1.
 paria, 6, 48.
 centuriones, 5, 189.
 centurionum, 3, 77.
 centusse curto, 5, 191.
 ceraso peccent, 6, 36.
 cerdo, 4, 51.
 certo puncto, 5, 100.
 cervice laxa, 1, 98.
 cervices purpureas, 3, 41.
 cessas, 5, 127.
 cesses, 4, 33.
 cessit pavido, 5, 30.
 ceves, 1, 87.
 chaere = χαῖρε, Prol., 8.
 Chaerestratus, 5, 162.
 chartae, 3, 11.

collo orcae, 3, 50.
 collueris, 1, 18.
 columbo, 3, 16.
 comitem, 1, 54.
 comites, 5, 32.
 comitum, 3, 7.
 committere, 2, 4.
 commota bile, 4, 6.
 conari, Prol., 9.
 conchae baca, 2, 66.
 concordia fata, 5, 49.
 condidit Ionio, 6, 29.
 conditur uxor, 2, 14.
 conives, 6, 50.
 conpage soluta, 3, 68.
 conpescere examen, 5, 100.
 conpita, 4, 28; 5, 35.
 conpositas venas, 3, 91.
 conpositum ius, 2, 73.
 conpositus lecto, 3, 104.
 consentire, 5, 46.
 consumere cras, 5, 68.
 soles, 5, 41.
 contemnere, 3, 21.
 Copulative compounds, 6, 50.
 coquere messis, 3, 6.
 vellus, 2, 65.
 coquitur massa, 5, 10.
 cor Enni, 6, 10.
 luctificabile, 1, 78.
 corbes, 1, 71.
 cornea, 1, 47.
 cornicaris, 5, 12.
 cornua torva, 1, 99.
 Cornute, 5, 23. 37.
 corrupto olivo, 2, 64.
 cortice pingui, 1, 96.
 corvos poetas, Prol., 13.
 corvos sequi, 3, 61.
 corymbis, 1, 101.
 costa ratis, 6, 31.
 costam subduximus, 1, 95.
 cras hesternum, 5, 68.
 crassa tucceta, 2, 42.
 Crassi aedes, 2, 36.
 crassis amomis, 3, 104.
 crassos dies, 5, 60.
 crassum ridere, 5, 190.
 Craterus, 3, 65.
 Cratinus, 1, 123.
 crepet, 2, 11.
 solidum, 5, 25.
 crepidas, 1, 127.
 crepuere dentes, 3, 101.
 creta notare, 5, 108.
 cretata ambitio, 5, 177.
 cribro populi, 3, 112.
 crispante naso, 3, 87.
 Crispini balnea, 5, 126.
 crudi, 1, 51.
 crudis, 1, 92.
 crudo pulvere, 2, 67.
 crudum unguem, 5, 162.
 crura praebere, 4, 42.
 cubito tangere, 4, 34.
 cuinam? cuinam? 2, 19.
 cuivis, 2, 6.
 culpa carere, 3, 33.
 cultor invenum, 5, 63.
 cultrix foci, 3, 26.
 cum = postquam, 1, 9.
 cuminum, 5, 55.
 cunis exemit, 2, 31.
 curas hominum, 1, 1.
 curata cuticula, 4, 18.
 Curibus, 4, 26.
 curo, 3, 78.
 curta supellex, 4, 52.
 curtare rem, 6, 34.

chartis nocturnis, 5, 62.
cheragra, 5, 58.
Cherry pit, 3, 50.
chlamydes, 6, 46.
chordae, 6, 2.
chrysendeta, 2, 52 (note).
Chrysidis, 5, 165.

D.

δακτυλοδεικτεῖσθαι, 1, 28.
Dama, 6, 76, 79.
damnosa canicula, 3, 49.
Damocles, 3, 39 (note).
Danaides, 2, 56 (note). dare verba, 3, 19; 4, 45.
Dative case, 1, 116, 126; 6, 34.
datum seutire, 5, 124.
Davus, 5, 161.
decenter, 1, 84.
decerpere, 5, 42.
decipe nervos, 4, 45.
decoctius, 1, 125.
decoquit, 5, 57.
decor, 1, 92.
decorus pelle, 4, 14.
decursu, 6, 61.
decussa farina, 3, 112.
dedecus, 1, 81.
 obsto, 5, 163.
deducit, 5, 35.
defigere culpam, 5, 16. deinde, 4, 8; 5, 143.
δεισιδαιμων, 2, 31.
delphin, 1, 94.
delumbe, 1, 104.
demersus, 3, 34.
demorsos, 1, 106.
demum, 1, 64.
dentalia terens, 1, 73.
dente peragere, 6, 21.
dentes refecti, 3, 101.
depellentibus dis, 5, 167.
deposcere voces, 5, 26.
deprendere mores, 3, 52.
depunge, 6, 79.
deradere limum, 4, 29.
derigere, 1, 66.
descendere in sese, 4, 23.
despuat, 4, 35.
despumare, 3, 3.
destertuit, 6, 10.
detonsa, 3, 54.
deunces, 5, 150.
216a dexter senio, 3, 48.
dextro Hercule, 2, 12.
 Iove, 5, 114.

E.

ebria, 1, 50.
ebulliat, 2, 10.
ecce, 1, 30; 2, 31.
echo, 1, 102.
edictum, 1, 134.
effluis, 3, 20.
effundat, 1, 65.
egerit, 5, 69.
egregius lusisse, 6, 6.
εἶεν, 4, 20.

curto centusse, 5, 191.
curva, 4, 12.
curvae in terris, 2, 61.
curvos mores, 3, 52.
curvus, 6, 16.
custos purpura, 5, 30.
cute, in c. figere, 4, 33.
 in c. novi, 3, 30.
 perditus, 1, 23.
cuticula curata, 4, 18.
cutis aegra, 3, 63.
Cybele, 5, 186 (note).
cynico, 1, 133.

215b

dia, 1, 31.
Dice, 3, 48.
dicenda tacenda, 4, 5.
dicier, 1, 28.
dictarunt, 1, 52.
dictata, 1, 29.
dictatorem induit, 1, 74.
diducere ramos, 3, 56.
dies Herodis, 5, 180.
digito infami = medio, 2, 33.
 monstrari, 1, 28.
digitum exsere, 5, 119.
digna cedro, 1, 42.
dilutas guttas, 3, 14.
Dinomaches, 4, 20.
dinoscere cautus, 5, 25.
 speciem, 5, 105.
dirimebat, 1, 94.
discernere rectum, 4, 11.
discincti Nattae, 3, 31.
discincto verna, 4, 22.
discolor usus, 5, 52.
discrepet, 6, 18.
discutitur, 2, 25.
dis depellentibus, 5, 167.
 iratis, 4, 27.
disponere, 5, 43.
Dissimilation, 1, 72.
dissutis malis, 3, 59.
ditescant, 6, 15.
diversum, in d. scindere, 5, 154.
dividere in Geminos, 5, 49.
doctas figuras, 1, 86.
doctores Graios, 6, 38.
dolores finire, 5, 161.
dolosi nummi, ProL., 12. domini, 5, 130.
domo maiore, 3, 92.
δραπετεύειν, 5, 156.
ducere bona, 2, 63.
 ferrum, 5, 4.
 ramum, 3, 28.
 vultum, 5, 40.
duci ab uno sidere, 5, 46.
ducis genio, 6, 48.
dum, 3, 4; 5, 10.
dum ne, 4, 21.
duplici hamo, 5, 154.
216b durum holus, 3, 112.

216b

Etruscan rites, 2, 36.
Etymology of ast, 2, 39.
 bidental, 2, 27.
 conpita, 4, 28.
 fagus, 5, 59.
 Palilia, 1, 72.
 scloppus, 5, 13.
 sodes, 3, 89.
 sollers, 5, 142.
 surdus, 6, 35.

217a

ἐκσειειν, 1, 49.
 elargiri, 3, 71.
 elegidia, 1, 51.
 ἔλευθέριος Ζεύς, 5, 114.
 elevet, 1, 6.
 eliquat, 1, 35.
 Elision, 4, 14.
 elixas, 4, 40.
 Ellipsis, 1, 4; 3, 19; 5, 139; 6, 29.
 emaci prece, 2, 3.
 emeruit, 5, 74.
 emole, 6, 26.
 ἐμπαιστιά, 2, 52.
 empta in calice, 6, 20.
 emunctae naris, 1, 118.
 en, 1, 26.
 enarrabile, 5, 29.
 enim, 1, 63.
 Enni cor, 6, 10.
 Ennius, Prol., 2; 6, 10 (note).
 ensis, 3, 40.
 Epithets, general, Prol., 12.
 epulis, 5, 42.
 equidem, 1, 110; 5, 19. 45.
 Ergenna, 2, 26.
 erilis metus, 5, 131.
 error, 5, 34.
 escas, 1, 22.
 esseda, 6, 47.
 estne ut, 2, 18.
 esto, 1, 20.
 etenim, 3, 48.
 ἢ τις ἢ οὐδεὶς, 1, 3.

F.

fabula, 5, 3. 152.
 face exstincta, 5, 166.
 supposita, 3, 116.
 facere with inf., 1, 44.
 faecem pannosam, 4, 32.
 faeno fumosa, 1, 72.
 faenoris merces, 6, 67.
 fagi, 5, 59.
 Falernum, 3, 3.
 fallere sollers, 5, 37.
 fallier, 3, 50.
 fallit regula, 4, 12.
 far modicum, 3, 25.
 farina, 3, 112; 5, 115.
 farrago, 5, 77.
 farrata olla, 4, 31.
 farre litabo, 2, 75.
 fas, 1, 61; 2, 73; 5, 99.
 fata, 5, 49.
 favilla, 1, 39.
 faxit, 1, 112.
 fenestra, 5, 180.
 fenestras, 3, 1.
 fenisecae, 6, 40.
 fermentum, 1, 24.
 ferrum, 5, 4.
 fert animus, 4, 7.
 ferto opimo, 2, 48.
 ferus, 5, 171.
 ferveat lector, 1, 126.
 fervebit olla, 5, 9.
 ferventi veneno, 3, 37.
 ferventis massae, 2, 67.
 fervescit sanguis, 3, 116.
 fervet plebecula, 4, 6.
 festa luce, 6, 69.
 festuca, 5, 175.
 fibra, 1, 47; 2, 26. 45; 3, 32; 5, 29. fictile, 2, 60.
 fidele senectae, 2, 41.
 fidelia non cocta, 3, 22.
 putet, 3, 73.
 tumet, 5, 183.

usque, 6, 15.
 varo (baro), 5, 138.
 euge, 1, 49. 75. 111.
 euhion, 1, 102.
 Eupolis, 1, 124.
 evitandum, 2, 27.
 exalare, 3, 99; 5, 148.
 examen, 1, 6; 5, 100.
 excussit aristas, 3, 115. excusso naso, 1, 118.
 excute, 1, 49; 6, 75.
 excutiat guttas, 2, 54.
 excutienda, 5, 22.
 excutit e manibus, 3, 101.
 excutitur cinis, 6, 45.
 exire, 1, 46; 5, 78. 130. 174; 6, 60. exossatus ager, 6, 52.
 expedit, Prol., 7.
 expers maris, 6, 39.
 expiare frontem, 2, 34.
 exporrecto, 3, 82.
 expungam, 2, 13.
 exsere digitum, 5, 119.
 exspes, 2, 50.
 exstet aqualiculus, 1, 57.
 exstinxerit, 5, 145.
 exsultat, 1, 82.
 exsuperat, 3, 89.
 extendit calces, 3, 105.
 mores, 5, 38.
 rimas, 3, 2.
 extrinsecus, 5, 128.

217b

filix, 4, 41.
 Final sentence elliptical, 1, 4.
 findor, 3, 9.
 fingendus, 3, 24.
 finire dolores, 5, 161.
 finis, 1, 48; 5, 65.
 fissa aure, 6, 70.
 fistula, 3, 14.
 fixum mummm, 5, 111.
 Flaccus, 1, 116.
 flagellas puteal, 4, 49.
 flexus metae, 3, 68.
 Floralia, 5, 178.
 foci cultrix, 3, 26.
 foco admovit, 6, 1.
 focus, 1, 72.
 foedere certo, 5, 45.
 folle, 5, 11.
 fonte caballino, Prol., 1.
 forcipe, 4, 40.
 fores udas, 5, 166.
 fortunare, 2, 45.
 fossor, 5, 122.
 fractus, 1, 18.
 frangere Saturnum, 5, 50.
 rem patriam, 5, 165.
 fratres aenos, 2, 56.
 fretus, 4, 3.
 frigere, 3, 109.
 frigescant, 1, 109.
 frigidus cinis, 6, 45.
 frontem perisse, 5, 104.
 fronte politus, 5, 116.
 fruge Cleanthea, 5, 64.
 fulta, 1, 78.
 fulto, 5, 146.
 fumo dare pondus, 5, 20.
 fumosa Palilia, 1, 72.
 fumosum sinciput, 6, 70.
 fundo imo, 2, 51.
 funem reduco, 5, 118.
 funeris cena, 6, 33.
 funus praeclarum, 2, 10.

218a

fidelibus nata, 5, 48.
figere iugum, 4, 28.
solem, 4, 33.
terram, 3, 80.
figurae trama, 6, 73.
figuras ponere, 1, 86.

G.

218b

Gabinus cinctus, 5, 31 (note).
Galli, 5, 186.
garrit, 5, 96.
gaudere = ἀγαπᾶν, 6, 63.
paratus, 1, 132.
gausape, 4, 37; 6, 46.
gemina lance, 4, 10.
geminet guttas, 3, 14.
Geminos (in G.) dividere, 5, 49.
producis, 6, 18.
generoso honesto, 2, 74.
Genitive of material, 2, 52.
free use of, 1, 14.
genius, 1, 113; 2, 3; 4, 27; 5, 151; 6, 19. 48.
genuinum, 1, 115.

H.

habita tecum, 4, 52.
haeres, 2, 19.
hamo duplici, 5, 154.
hebenum, 5, 135.
hederae, Prol., 6.
Helicone, 5, 7.
Heliconidas, Prol., 4.
Hellebore, 3, 63; 4, 16; 5, 100. heminas, 1, 130.
Hendiadys, 2, 52; 5, 131.
herba, 6, 26.
Hercule dextro, 2, 12.
heres proximus, 2, 12.
Ἑρμῆς κερδῶος, 6, 51.
heroas sensus, 1, 69.
Herodis dies, 5, 180.
hesterni Quirites, 3, 106.
hesternum cras, 5, 68.
oscitat, 3, 59.

I.

iactare caudam, 4, 15.
festucam, 5, 175.
iam, 5, 33.
nunc, 5, 110.
Iane, 1, 58.
idcirco, 2, 28.
idonea dare, 5, 20.
iecore, 1, 25.
aegro, 5, 129.
igitur, 1, 98; 4, 14.
ignovisse, 2, 24.
illex, 2, 24.
ilia, 4, 43.
Ilias Atti, 1, 50. 123.
imagines, Prol., 5; 3, 28.
Imperfect of a false impression, 5, 93.
inane, 1, 1.
inanes caelestium, 2, 61.
inclusi, 1, 13.
incoctum honesto, 2, 74. incolumis, 6, 37.
increpuit, 5, 127.
increvit fibris, 3, 32.
incurvasse, 1, 91.

fur, 1, 85.
Future as imperative, 1, 91.
gnomic, 2, 5.
participle, 1, 100.

glutto, 5, 112.
Glyconi, 5, 9.
graece nugari, 1, 70.
Graiorum, 1, 127.
Graios, 6, 38.
grana, 5, 55.
granaria, 5, 110; 6, 25.
grande loqui, 1, 14; 5, 7.
grandes Galli, 5, 186.
patinae, 2, 42.
grandi polenta, 3, 55.
grandia, 3, 45.
gravis alitus, 3, 89.
Saturnus, 5, 50.
gurgite, 2, 15.
gurgulio, 4, 38.
guttas excutere, 2, 54.
guttare exalare, 3, 99.
niti, 5, 6.

hianda, 5, 3.
hiantem ducere, 5, 176.
Hiatus, 3, 66.
hibernat, 6, 7.
hircosa, 3, 77.
Historic present, 4, 2.
holus durum, 3, 112.
siccum, 6, 20.
hominum, 1, 1.
honesto generoso, 2, 74.
horoscope, 6, 18.
horridulus, 1, 54.
hospes, 2, 8.
hucine rerum, 3, 15.
humana re, 3, 72.
humilis susurros, 2, 6.
hyacinthia, 1, 32.
Hypallage, 3, 4. 50. 57.
Hyperbaton, 1, 23; 6, 13.
Hypsipyilas, 1, 34.

219a

ingemere, 4, 13.
vitam, 5, 61.
ingeminat, 1, 102; 3, 87.
ingeni largitor, Prol., 10.
ingenium, 4, 4.
ingentis Titos, 1, 20.
ingenuo ludo, 5, 16.
ingerere, 5, 6. 177.
inhibere perita, 2, 34.
iniquas heminas, 1, 130.
inlita Medis, 3, 53.
inmeiat vulvae, 6, 73.
inmittere templis, 2, 62.
inodora, 6, 35.
inpalescere chartis, 5, 62.
inpellere, 2, 13. 59; 5, 128. aurem, 2, 21.
impensius, 6, 68.
inprobe, 4, 47.
inrigo somno, 5, 56.
inrorans piper, 6, 21.
insana canicula, 3, 5.
inscitia debilis, 5, 99.
inserere aures, 5, 63.

220a

219b

- incusa auro, 2, 52.
 incutere deos, 5, 187.
 inde, 1, 126; 5, 153.
 indomitum Falernum, 3, 3. induco, 6, 49.
 indulge genio, 5, 151.
 induto capite, 3, 106.
 inepte cornicari, 5, 12.
 ineptus lictor, 5, 175.
 inexpertum deprehendere, 3, 52.
 infami digito, 2, 33.
 infelix auster, 6, 13.
 Infinitive, perf. instead of present, Prol., 2; 1, 42. 91. 132; 2, 66; 4, 7. 17; 5, 24. 33; 6, 4. 6. 17. 77.
 for gerund, etc., Prol., 11; 1, 59. 70. 118;
 2, 34. 54; 3, 51; 4, 16; 5, 20. 24. 37.
 100; 6, 3. 24. 36. 77.
 as a subst. with demonst. and possessive, 1. 9. 27. 123; 5, 53; 6, 38. nursery infinitives, 3, 18.
 in exclamation, 1, 24; 4, 36.
 passive in -er, 1, 28; 3, 50.
 for subjunctive, 5, 46.
 inflantis corpora, 5, 187.
 infodiam, 1, 120.
 infundere monitus, 1, 79.
 infusa lymphā, 3, 13.
 Insolatio, 3, 33. 98; 4, 18; 5, 179.
 insomnis, 3, 54.
 inspice, 3, 88.
 instanti imperio, 5, 157.
 insulso Glyconi, 5, 9. intabescant, 3, 38.
 integer, 5, 173.
 intendisse numeris, 6, 4.
 intepet ora, 6, 7.
 Interrogative dependent in Indicative, 3, 67. intima, 1, 21.
 intortos mores, 5, 38.
 introrsum, 2, 9.
 intumuit bilis, 5, 145.
 intus novi, 3, 30.
 pallere, 3, 42.
 i nunc, 4, 19.
 invigilat, 3, 55.
 Ionio condere, 6, 29.
 Iove nostro, 5, 50.
 dextro, 5, 114.
 iratis dis, 4, 27.
 iratum Eupolidem, 1, 124.
 Ironical 1st Person, 3, 3.
 Isis, 5, 186 (note).
 Italo honore, 1, 129.
 iubeo (construction), 5, 161.
 iudex potior, 2, 20.
 iugum figere, 4, 28.
 iunctura, 1, 65. 92; 5, 14.
 iura, 5, 137.
 iure, 3, 48.
 ius fasque, 2, 73.
 iustum suspendere, 4, 10.

L.

220b

- labefactent, 4, 40.
 labella uda, 2, 32.
 labello exporrecto, 3, 82.
 labentis annos, 2, 2.
 Labeo Attius, 1, 4. 50. 123 (note). laborat vinci, 5, 39.
 laboro scire, 2, 17.
 labra moves, 5, 184.
 prolui, Prol., 1.
 lacerae ratis, 6, 31.
 lactibus unctis, 2, 30.
 laena, 1, 32.
 laetari praetrepidum, 2, 54.
 laevo pectore, 2, 53.
 lagoena, 6, 17.
 sitiente, 3, 92.
 lallare, 3, 18.
 lambunt, Prol., 5.
 λαμπάδηφορία, 6, 61.
 lance gemina, 4, 10.
 magna, 2, 71.
 lapidosa cheragra, 5, 58.
 lapillo meliore, 2, 1.
 laquearibus auratis, 3, 40.
 lare presso, 5, 109.
 largior, 6, 51.
 largire, 6, 32.
 largitor, Prol., 10.
 Laribus donata, 5, 31.
 larvae, 1, 38 (note).
 latet ulcus, 3, 113.
 Latinae fidis, 6, 4.
 lato auro, 4, 44.
 latus dare, 6, 8.
 mundi, 6, 76.
 lautus ponere, 6, 23.
 lavatur, 3, 98.
 Lawyers' fees, 3, 75.
 laxa cervice, 1, 98.
 laxamus seria, 5, 44.
 laxes granaria, 5, 110.
 licetur Graecos, 5, 191.
 Licini, 2, 36.
 lictor, 1, 75.
 ineptus, 5, 175.
 Ligus ora, 6, 6.
 limen obscenum, 5, 165.
 limina frigescent, 1, 109.
 limite dextro, 3, 57.
 limo viridi, 3, 22.
 limum veterem, 4, 29.
 linea, 3, 4.
 lingua, sub l., 2, 9.
 linguae pictae, 5, 25.
 lippa propago, 2, 72.
 lippus, 1, 79; 5, 77.
 liquescant in flammis, 2, 47.
 liquido plasmate, 1, 17.
 litabis, 5, 120.
 litabo farre, 2, 75.
 Literary ladies, Prol., 13.
 Litotes, Prol., 1; 1, 19.
 littera canina, 1, 110.
 Pythagorea, 3, 56.
 litus, 6, 8.
 locatus, 3, 72.
 loturo, 3, 93.
 lotus, 5, 86.
 lubrica Coa, 5, 135.
 lucem palustrem, 5, 60.
 lucernae dispositae, 5, 181.
 Luciferi rudis, 5, 103.
 Lucilius, 1, 2. 114.
 lucis (Abl.), 2, 27.
 lucro vendere, 6, 75.
 luctata canis, 5, 159.
 luctificabile, 1, 78.
 lucum ponere, 1, 70.
 luditur tibi, 3, 20.
 ludo ingenuo, 5, 16.
 lumbum intrant, 1, 20.
 lumine figentes, 3, 80.

221a

laxis labris, 3, 102.
 laxum caput, 3, 58.
 lector ferveat, 1, 126.
 legarat, 6, 66.
 legere nebulas, 5, 7.
 leges, 1, 17.
 lemures, 5, 185.
 lenia Surrentina, 3, 93.
 leti memor, 5, 153.
 λευκὴ ἡμέρα, 2, 2.
 levis, sit tibi terra, 1, 37 (note).
 levis trossulus, 1, 82.
 lex publica, 5, 98.
 libabit, 2, 5.
 libelle, 1, 120.
 liber = play, 1, 76.
 Liberator Iuppiter, 5, 114 (note).
 liber pede, 1, 13.
 libertate, 5, 73.
 Libonis puteal, 4, 49 (note).
 Libra aequali, 5, 47.
 librae ancipitis, 4, 11.
 librat, 1, 86.

M.

222a

macram spem, 2, 35.
 Macrinus, 2, 1.
 Maenas, 1, 101. 105.
 Maeonides, 6, 11.
 magister artis, Prol., 10.
 magistrum barbatum, 4, 1. magnanimus puer, 6, 22.
 maiestate manus, 4, 8.
 maiorum limina, 1, 108.
 μακαρίτης, 3, 103.
 maligne, 3, 21.
 mammae, 3, 18.
 mando, 2, 39.
 mane, 1, 134.
 clarum, 3, 1.
 manes, 1, 38; 5, 152.
 offerings to, 2, 3.
 manibus quatere, 2, 35.
 Manius, 6, 56. 60.
 mansuescit, 4, 41.
 mantica, 4, 24.
 marcentis vulvas, 4, 36.
 Marcus Dama, 5, 79.
 marem strepitum, 6, 4.
 maris expers, 6, 39.
 Marsi clientis, 3, 75.
 mascula bilis, 5, 144.
 massa, 5, 10.
 massae venas, 2, 67.
 Masuri rubrica, 5, 90.
 matertera, 2, 31; 6, 54.
 medendi natura, 5, 101.
 medico, 3, 90.
 Medis bracatis, 3, 52.
 meditari somnia, 3, 83.
 mefites sulphureas, 3, 99.
 meite, 1, 114.
 melior sorbere, 4, 16.
 membrana bicolor, 3, 10.
 memini, Prol., 3.
 memor leti, 5, 153.
 mena, 3, 76.
 Menander, 5, 161 (note).
 mendose colligis, 5, 85.
 mendosum tinnire, 5, 106.
 mens bona, 2, 8.
 mera libertas, 5, 82.
 meracas, 4, 16.
 mercare, 6, 75.
 mercede, 2, 29.
 merces faenoris, 6, 67.
 mercibus Italis, 5, 54.
 Mercurialem salivam, 5, 112.

Lunai portus, 6, 9.
 Lupus, 1, 115.
 lusca sacerdos, 5, 186.
 lusce, 1, 128.
 lussisse, 6, 6.
 lustralibus, 2, 33.
 lutatus amomis, 3, 104.
 lutea gausapa, 6, 46.
 pellis, 3, 95.
 luto, in l. fixum, 5, 111.
 lutum udum, 3, 23.
 luxum, 1, 67.
 luxuria sollers, 5, 142.
 lyncem, 1, 101.
 lyra, 6, 2.

221b

mergis obvia, 6, 30.
 merum fundere, 2, 3.
 Messalinus, 2, 72.
 Messalla, 2, 72.
 messe propria, 6, 25.
 metae flexus, 3, 68.
 metas, 1, 131.
 metuens divum, 2, 31.
 metuentia scombros, 1, 43.
 metuo with Inf., 1, 47; 4, 28.
 meus, 5, 88.
 Mida rex, 1, 121 (note).
 mille species, 5, 52.
 millesime, 3, 28.
 miluus, 4, 26.
 Mimalloneis, 1, 99.
 Mimas, 1, 99 (note).
 minui, 6, 16.
 minutum pappare, 3, 17.
 mirae, bene mirae, 1, 111.
 mire opifex, 6, 3.
 mittit, 2, 36.
 mobile, 1, 18.
 mobilis imitari, 1, 59.
 modice sitiante, 3, 92.
 modico ore, 5, 15.
 modicus voti, 5, 109.
 modus, 3, 69.
 molle subrisit, 3, 110.
 momento turbinis, 5, 78.
 monstrari digito, 1, 28.
 montis promittere, 3, 65.
 morari Iovem, 2, 43.
 mordaci aceto, 5, 86.
 vero, 1, 107.
 mores pallentis, 5, 15.
 moretur, 1, 77.
 morientis aceti, 4, 32.
 moror, 1, 111.
 morosa vena, 6, 72.
 moveare, 5, 123.
 Mucius, 1, 115.
 muria, 6, 20.
 murice vitiato, 2, 65.
 murmura rodere, 3, 81.
 tollere, 2, 6.
 murmure clauso, 5, 11.
 mutare mercibus, 5, 54.
 muttire, 1, 119.
 Mycenis, 5, 17.

222b

N.

nare balba, 1, 33.
naribus uncis, 1, 41.
naso cadat ira, 5, 91.
 crispante, 3, 87.
 excusso, 1, 118.
 tangere, 6, 17.
nata fidelibus, 5, 48.
natalia, 6, 19.
natalicia, 1, 16.
natat, 5, 182.
Natta, 3, 31.
natura, 5, 98. 101.
naufragus, 1, 88; 6, 33 (note).
ne = ne-quidem, 5, 172.
 omitted, 1, 112.
-ne in rhetorical questions, 1, 22.
nebulas legere, 5, 7.
nectar cantare, Prol., 14.
nefas, 1, 119.
negatas, Prol., 11.
Negative, position of, 1, 45; 2, 3. nempe, 2, 70; 3, 1; 5, 67. nepos, 6, 71.
Nerea, 1, 94.
Nerius, 2, 14.
Nero, supposed allusions to, 1, 56. 75. 121; 4, 49.
nervis, 2, 41.
nervos agitare, 5, 129.
 decipere, 4, 45.
neu, 3, 51; 6, 66.

O.

obba, 5, 148.
oberres, 5, 156.
oberret, 6, 32.
obiurgabere, 5, 169.
obscenum limen, 5, 165.
obsequio, 5, 156.
obstipo capite, 3, 80.
obstiteris, 5, 157.
obvia mergis, 6, 30.
occa, 6, 26.
occipiti, 1, 62.
occurrere, 1, 62; 3, 64.
ocello patranti, 1, 18.
ocima, 4, 22.
ocius ad navem, 5, 141.
oculos urentis, 2, 34.
oenophorum, 5, 140.
offas carminis, 5, 5.
officium, 5, 94; 6, 27.
ohe, 1, 23.
oletum, 1, 112.
oleum, 6, 50.
olivo corrupto, 2, 64.
 tangere, 3, 44.
olla farrata, 4, 31.
 Prognos, 5, 8.

P.

pacto, 4, 43.
Pacuvius, 1, 77.
pagina, 5, 20.
palaestritae, 4, 39.
palato, 1, 35.
Palilia, 1, 72.
pallentis cumini, 5, 55.
 mores, 5, 15.
palles, 1, 124; 3, 94. 96; 4, 47; 5, 80. 184. palliatiae, 5, 14 (note).

nigra sepia, 3, 13.
nihil de nihilo, 3, 84.
niti gutture, 5, 6.
nocte paratum, 1, 90.
noctem purgare, 2, 16.
noctes decerpere, 5, 42.
nodosa harundo, 3, 11.
nodum abripit, 5, 159.
non, position of, 1, 45; 2, 3; 3, 78.
non = ne, 1, 5; 5, 45.
non = nonne, 1, 50.
nonaria, 1, 133.
noris, 4, 52.
nostin, 4, 25.
nostrum, Prol., 7; 5, 151.
novimus, 4, 43.
nox tertia, 3, 91.
nucibus, 1, 10.
nugae, 1, 5.
 bullatae, 5, 19.
nugari Graece, 1, 70.
nugaris, 1, 56.
nugator, 5, 127.
Numae aurum, 2, 59.
numerare diem, 2, 1.
numeris, 6, 3.
numeros, 1, 13; 5, 123.
nummi dolosi, Prol., 12.
nummus asper, 3, 70.
nutrici, 2, 39.
nutrire nummos, 5, 150.

omentum, 2, 47; 6, 74.
φωσκοπική, 5, 185.
operae est, 6, 9.
opertum, 1, 121.
opifex, 6, 3.
opimo ferto, 2, 48.
opimum pingue, 3, 32.
optare linguas centum, 5, 2.
orbis pueris, 2, 20.
orca, 3, 76.
orcae angustae, 3, 50.
ordo, 3, 67.
ore modico, 5, 15.
Orestes, 3, 118.
oscitat, 3, 59.
o si, 2, 9.
os populi, 1, 42.
ossa, 1, 37.
ostendisse iuvat, 5, 24.
ovato auro, 2, 55.
ovile, 2, 49.
ovo rupto, 5, 185.

plantaria, 4, 39.
plaudere, w. accus. (?), 4, 31.
plausisse, 6, 77.
plebeia, 3, 114; 5, 18.
plorabile, 1, 34.
Plural, Prol., 6; 1, 75; 2, 33; 3, 79. 104; 4, 16; 5, 110.
pluteum caedit, 1, 106.
poetas corvos, Prol., 13.
poetridas, Prol., 13.

pallidam Pirenen, Prol., 4. pallor, 1, 26.
 palmis, 6, 39.
 palpo, 5, 176.
 palustrem lucem, 5, 60.
 panis secundus, 3, 112 (note).
 pannosam, 4, 32.
 pannucia, 4, 21.
 papae, 5, 79.
 pappare minutum, 3, 17.
 paratum nocte, 1, 90. paratas gaudere, 1, 132.
 nescire, 6, 36.
 Parca, 5, 48.
 paria centum, 6, 48.
 Parnaso, Prol., 2.
 Parthi vulnera, 5, 4.
 Participle in questions, 3, 67; 5, 124.
 parvus, 3, 44.
 patella, 3, 26; 4, 17.
 pater quartus, 6, 58.
 paterna dicta, 6, 66.
 paterni testiculi, 1, 103.
 patinae, 2, 42; 6, 21.
 patranti oculo, 1, 18.
 patriciae vulvae, 6, 73.
 patricius sanguis, 1, 61.
 patruelis, 6, 53.
 patruī proneptis, 6, 54.
 patruus, 1, 11; 2, 10.
 patula ulmo, 3, 6.
 pavidō mihi, 5, 30.
 pavisse, 6, 77.
 pavone, 6, 11.
 peccas, 5, 119.
 peccat (pulpa), 2, 68.
 peccent casiae, 6, 36.
 pectine, 6, 2.
 pectore calido, 5, 144.
 laevo, 2, 53.
 sinuoso, 5, 27.
 sub p. vulpū, 5, 117.
 pecuaria Arcadiae, 3, 9.
 pede liber, 1, 13.
 pedes summos, 3, 108.
 Pedius, 1, 85.
 Pegaseium, Prol., 14.
 peioribus orti, 6, 15.
 pelle summa, 4, 14.
 pellem aptas, 5, 140.
 pelliculam, 5, 116.
 pellis lutea, 3, 95.
 Penatis, 2, 45.
 penu locuplete, 3, 74.
 perages, 5, 139.
 peragit bona, 6, 22.
 percussa, 3, 21.
 percute agnam, 5, 168.
 perditus cute, 1, 23.
 perducere facies, 2, 56.
 Perfect, 2, 32. 43; 5, 95.
 Inf. See INFINITIVE.
 pergant sudare, 5, 150.
 perge, 3, 97.
 Pericli, 4, 3.
 perisse frontem, 5, 102.
 perita inhibere, 2, 34.
 permisit sparsisse, 5, 33.
 pernae, 3, 75.
 peronatus, 5, 103.
 pertusa compita, 4, 28.
 πετόμενα διώκειν, 3, 60.
 petulanti, 1, 12. 133.
 pexus, 1, 15.
 Phalaris, 3, 39.
 phaleras, 3, 30.
 Phyllidas, 1, 34.
 picam, Prol., 9.
 picas, Prol., 13.

ποικίλη στοά, 3, 53.
 polenta, 3, 55.
 politus fronte, 5, 116.
 pollice, 5, 40.
 honesto, 6, 5.
 Polydamas, 1, 4.
 pondus dare fumo, 5, 20.
 ponere, 1, 53. 70; 3, 111; 5, 3; 6, 23. pontifices, 2, 69.
 Ponto advehe, 5, 134.
 popa venter, 6, 74.
 popello, 6, 50.
 blando, 4, 15.
 populi rem = rem publicam, 4, 1.
 porci, 1, 72.
 porrum sectile, 4, 30 (note).
 portam, extendit in p., 3, 105.
 porticus sapiens, 3, 54.
 postibus, 6, 45.
 postica sanna, 1, 62.
 postquam, 3, 90.
 pote, 1, 56.
 potis, 4, 13.
 praebet vellere, 2, 28.
 praecedenti tergo, 4, 24.
 praecipites imus, 3, 42.
 praecordia, 1, 117; 5, 22.
 praedictum, 5, 188.
 praefigere theta, 4, 13.
 praegrandi, 1, 124.
 praelargus, 1, 14.
 praeparet auster, 6, 12.
 praepone, 2, 18.
 praestantior, 6, 76.
 praetegit, 4, 45.
 praetor, 5, 88. 93.
 praetrepidum laetari, 2, 54.
 praetulerint, 1, 5. prandeat, 3, 85.
 prandia plebeia, 5, 18.
 post p. Calliroen, 1, 134.
 regum, 1, 67.
 premere ratione, 5, 39.
 ventos, 5, 11.
 presso Lare, 5, 109.
 primas noctes, 5, 42.
 primordia vocum, 6, 3.
 proceres, 1, 52.
 procerum, 2, 5.
 prodirem, Prol., 3.
 producis, 6, 19.
 progenies terrae, 6, 57.
 Prognēs olla, 5, 8.
 pro Iuppiter, 2, 22.
 Prolepsis, 3, 5.
 prolui, Prol., 1.
 promittere montis, 3, 65.
 promptum, 2, 6.
 proneptis patruī, 6, 53.
 properandus, 3, 23.
 protenso, 1, 57.
 protinus, 1, 110.
 protulerim, 1, 89.
 proxima uxor, 3, 43.
 prudentia rerum, 4, 4.
 psittaco, Prol., 8.
 pubis Germanae, 6, 44.
 Publius, 5, 74.
 puer, 5, 167; 6, 22.
 Pulfennius, 5, 190.
 pullatis (?), 5, 19.
 pulmentaria, 3, 102.
 pulmo praelargus, 1, 14.
 pulmone, 2, 30.
 pulmonem rumpere, 3, 27.
 pulpa, 2, 63.
 pulsa, 5, 24.
 pultes, 6, 40.
 puncto certo, 5, 100.

pictum in trabe, 1, 89.
pillea, 5, 82.
pilleus, 3, 106 (note).
pilos, ante p., 4, 5.
pingitur, ut p., 6, 63.
pingue opimum, 3, 33.
pinguem nebulam, 5, 181.
pingui auro, 2, 52.
pinguibus Umbris, 3, 74.
pinguior angulus, 5, 14.
pinsit, 1, 58.
piper, 3, 75; 5, 55. 136; 6, 21.
Pirenen, Prol., 4. pituita, 2, 57.

Q.

226a

quaesieris, 4, 25.
quamvis, 5, 70.
quando, 1, 46.
quandoque = quodcumque, 4, 28.
Quartan ague, 3, 91.
quartus pater, 6, 57.
quatere manibus, 2, 35.
que-que, Prol., 4.
quid agis, 3, 5.
quidnam, 2, 29.
quin, w. indic., 2, 71; 4, 14.
w. subjunct., 1, 84.
quincunce modesto, 5, 149.

R.

226b

R for L by dissimilation, 1, 72.
rabiosa silentia, 3, 81.
radere, 1, 107; 3, 114; 5, 15.
raderet, 3, 50.
ramale, 1, 97.
ramalia, 5, 59.
ramos Samios, 3, 56.
ramosa compita, 5, 35.
ramum ducere, 3, 28.
rancidulum, 1, 33.
rapiant hunc, 2, 38.
rapias Aegaeum, 5, 142.
rapidae vitae, 5, 94.
rara avis, 1, 46.
rasis antithetis, 1, 85.
rasisse, 2, 68.
rastro, 2, 11.
ratio, 5, 96. 119.
ratione, 3, 36; 5, 39.
ratis, 6, 31.
rauco murmure, 5, 11.
recens piper, 5, 136.
recenti sole, 5, 54.
toga, 1, 15.
receptare se, 6, 8.
recessus mentis, 2, 73.
recto talo, 5, 104.
rectum discernere, 4, 11.
recusem minui, 6, 15.
recutita sabbata, 5, 184.
redire in rugam, 6, 79.
reduco funem, 5, 118.
refulserit, Prol., 12.
regina, 2, 37.
regula, 4, 12; 5, 38.
regum = procerum, 1, 67; 3, 17.
regustatum salinum, 5, 138.
Relative w. subjunct., 3, 114. relaxat, 5, 125.
relego, 5, 118.
relicta (virtute), 3, 38.
relictam vitam, 5, 61.
rem populi, 4, 1.

pupae, 2, 70.
pupille, 4, 3.
pupillum, 2, 12.
puppe, in p. dii, 6, 30.
Puppets, 5, 128.
pura voce, 5, 28.
purgare noctem, 2, 16.
purgatas aures, 5, 63.
purpura custos, 5, 30.
pulum salinum, 3, 25.
puta, 4, 9.
puteal, 4, 49.
putet, 3, 73.
putre ulcus, 3, 114.
putris, 5, 58.
Pythagoras, 3, 56 (note).
Pythagoreo, 6, 11.

Quinti, 1, 73.
Quintus Ennius, Prol., 1; 6, 11.
quippe, 1, 88.
Quiritem, 5, 75.
Quirites, 3, 106; 4, 8.
quis = qui, 1, 63. 68.
= uter (?), 2, 20.
quisquam, 1, 112; 5, 83. 128.
quisque = quicumque, 5, 73.
quo with Inf., 1, 24.
quod si, Prol., 12.
quorsum, 5, 5.

reparabilis, 1, 102.
repone, 6, 66.
requiescere, 3, 90.
rerum prudentia, 4, 4.
resignent, 5, 28.
respondere maligne, 3, 22.
respue, 4, 51.
restas, 3, 97.
retecti dentes, 3, 101.
revello, 5, 92.
rex, 2, 37.
Rhenos, 6, 47.
Rhetorical question, with -ne, 1, 22.
rhombos, 6, 23.
ridere crassum, 5, 190.
meum, 1, 122.
rimas extendere, 3, 2.
rite salit, 3, 111.
ritu generis, 6, 59.
rixanti populo, 5, 178.
robusti carminis, 5, 5.
rodere casses, 5, 170.
murmura, 3, 81.
Roma turbida, 1, 5.
Romule, 1, 87.
Romulidae, 1, 31.
rosa fiat, 2, 38.
rota acri, 3, 24.
curras, 5, 72.
rubellum, 5, 147.
rubra solea, 5, 169.
rubrica, 1, 66; 5, 90.
rudere, 3, 9.
rudis Luciferi, 5, 103.
rugam, in r. redire, 6, 79.
rugosum piper, 5, 55.
rumore sinistro, 5, 164.
rumpere buccas, 5, 13.
pulmonem, 3, 27.
runcare, 4, 36.
rus saturum, 1, 71.

227a

S.

sabbata recutita, 5, 184.
Sabino foco, 6, 1.
sacerdos, 5, 186.
sacras facies, 2, 55.
sacrum piper, 6, 21.
salinum purum, 3, 25.
 terebrare, 5, 138.
salit cor, 3, 111.
saliva summa, 1, 104.
salivam Mercurialem, 5, 112.
 turdarum, 6, 24.
salivis lustralibus, 2, 33.
salutas, 3, 29.
sambucam, 5, 95.
Samios ramos, 3, 56.
sancte, 2, 15.
sancto, in s., 2, 69.
sanctos recessus, 2, 73.
sanguis fervescit, 3, 116.
 patricius, 1, 61.
sanna rugosa, 5, 91.
sannae posticae, 1, 62.
saperdam, 5, 134.
sapere deterius, 4, 21.
 hoc, 6, 38.
sapiens porticus, 3, 53.
sapimus patruos, 1, 11.
sapit, 1, 106.
sardonyche, 1, 16.
sartago, 1, 80.
σάρξ, 2, 63.
satur, 5, 56; 6, 71.
saturi, 1, 31.
Saturnia aera, 2, 59.
Saturnum gravem, 5, 50.
saturum, 1, 71.
satyrum, 5, 123.
saxa, 6, 27.
scabiosum far, 5, 74.
scabiosus, 2, 13.
scalpuntur, 1, 21.
scelerata pulpa, 2, 63.
scilicet, 1, 15; 2, 19; 4, 4. scinderis, 5, 154.
scintillant oculi, 3, 117.
scire tuum, 1, 27.
scis, 1, 53; 4, 10.
scloppo, 5, 13.
scombros, 1, 42.
scopuli, 6, 8.
scribimus inclusi, 1, 13.
scrobe, 1, 119.
scutica, 5, 131.
secretam aurem, 5, 96.
secreti loquimur, 5, 21.
sectabere, 5, 71.
secto pulvere, 1, 131.
secuit urbem, 1, 114.
secundo axe, 5, 72.
secura patella, 3, 26.
securus vulgi, 6, 12.
sede celsa, 1, 17.
seductior, 6, 42.
seductis divis, 2, 4.
seductum, 5, 143.
semipaganus, Prol., 6.
semuncia recti, 5, 121.
sene praegrandi, 1, 124.
senes, 6, 6.
senio dexter, 3, 48.
senio minui, 6, 16.
senium, 1, 26.
sepeli = sepelii, 3, 97.
sepia nigra, 3, 13.

simpuvia, 2, 59 (note).
sin, 5, 115.
sinciput, 6, 70.
singultiet, 6, 72.
sinistro genio, 4, 27.
 rumore, 5, 164.
sinu Socratico, 5, 37.
sinuoso pectore, 5, 27.
sis = sivis, 1, 108.
sistro, 5, 186.
sitiente camelo, 5, 136.
 lagoena, 3, 92.
sive = vel si, 1, 67.
Socrates, 4, 1 (note).
Socratico sinu, 5, 37.
sodes, 3, 89.
sole assiduo, 4, 18.
 recenti, 5, 54.
solea rubra, 5, 169.
soles longos, 5, 41.
solidum crepet, 5, 25.
sollers, 5, 142.
 fallere, 5, 37.
 nosse, 6, 24.
Solones, 3, 79.
somniasse, Prol., 2.
somno inrigo, 5, 56.
sonare vitium, 3, 21.
sorbere melior, 4, 16.
sorbet, 4, 32.
sorbitio, 4, 2.
sordidus, 1, 128.
σωρίτης, 6, 80.
sparsisse oculos, 5, 33.
speciem veri, 5, 105.
species hominum, 5, 52.
spirare surdum, 6, 35.
Spleen, the seat of laughter, 1, 12.
splene petulanti, 1, 12.
spondente, 5, 79.
spumosum, 1, 96.
Staienus, 2, 19 (note).
Staius, 2, 19, 22.
stare contra, 5, 96.
Steelyard, 5, 100.
stemmae Tusco, 3, 28.
steriles veri, 5, 75.
stertimus, 3, 3.
stertis, 3, 58.
Stoic catechism, 3, 67; 5, 104.
stolidam barbam, 2, 28.
strepitum marem, 6, 4.
strigiles, 5, 126, 131.
stingere venas, 2, 66.
struere rem, 2, 44.
studere (absol.), 3, 9.
stupet vitio, 3, 32.
stuppas, 5, 135.
subaerato auro, 5, 106.
subdite rebus, 5, 124.
subduximus, 1, 95.
subeas dominos, 5, 155.
subere, 1, 97.
subiere, 3, 106.
subiit, 2, 55.
subit inter curva rectum, 4, 11.
 tremor, 3, 110.
subrisit molle, 3, 110.
subsellia, 1, 82.
Subura, 5, 32.
succinctis Laribus, 5, 31.
succinctus, 5, 140.
succinis ambages, 3, 20.
sudans pater, 3, 47.

228a

sequaces, Prol., 6.
 Sequence of Tenses, 1, 4; 5, 107.
 sequi = sectari, Prol., 11; 5, 14.
 seria argenti, 2, 11.
 seria laxamus, 5, 44.
 seriolae, 4, 29.
 Serpent worship, 1, 113.
 servas vulpem, 5, 117.
 servitium acre, 5, 127.
 sesquipede, 1, 57.
 sessilis obba, 5, 148.
 severos unguis, 1, 64.
 si = εἶγε, 5, 173.
 sic, Prol., 3.
 siccas messes, 3, 5.
 siccis cognatis, 5, 163.
 Sicoli iuveni, 3, 39.
 sidere, ab uno s. duci, 5, 46.
 signum lagoenae, 6, 17.
 silentia fecisse, 4, 7. rodere, 3, 81.
 siliquis pasta, 3, 55.

T.

tabellas adsigna, 5, 81.
 tabula caerulea, 6, 33.
 Tadius, 6, 66.
 tali (game), 3, 48 (note).
 talo recto, 5, 104.
 tandem, 1, 16; 3, 103.
 tange venas, 3, 107.
 tantae quantum, 1, 60.
 tectoria linguae, 5, 25.
 temone, 5, 70.
 temperat, 5, 51.
 tempore, vivis ex t., 3, 62.
 temptemus fauces, 3, 113.
 tenax veri, 5, 48.
 tendere versum, 1, 65.
 teneat actus, 5, 99.
 tenero columbo, 3, 16.
 palato, 1, 35.
 tenuia (trissyllab.), 5, 94.
 tenuis salivas, 6, 24.
 tenus, 6, 25.
 tepidum, 1, 84.
 terebrare salinum, 5, 138.
 terens sulco, 1, 73.
 teres ore, 5, 15.
 terrae filius, 6, 59.
 progenies, 6, 57.
 tertia nox, 3, 91.
 tesserula, 5, 74.
 testaque lutoque, 3, 61. testiculi, 1, 103.
 tetigisse signum, 6, 17.
 tetrico pectine, 6, 2.
 theta nigrum, 4, 13.
 Thyestae olla, 5, 8.
 thynni cauda, 5, 183.
 Tiberino in gurgite, 2, 15.
 timor albus, 3, 115.
 tincta veneno, 3, 37.
 tinniat mendosum, 5, 106.
 Titos ingentis, 1, 20.
 toga recenti, 1, 15.
 togae verba, 5, 14.
 tollat munera cerdo, 4, 51.
 tolle piper, 5, 136.
 ut volo, 5, 87.
 tollere susurros, 2, 7.
 tollit = sustulit, 4, 2.
 torosa iuventus, 3, 86.
 torquere buxum, 3, 51.

229b

sudare deunces, 5, 150.
 sudes, 2, 53.
 suffla, 4, 20.
 sulco terens, 1, 73.
 sulphure sacro, 2, 25.
 sulphureas mefites, 3, 99.
 sumen calidum, 1, 53.
 summa boni, 4, 17.
 summae dest aliquid, 6, 64.
 summos pedes, 3, 108.
 supellex, 4, 52.
 superbo vitulo, 1, 100.
 supinus, 1, 129.
 supplantat, 1, 35.
 supposita face, 3, 116.
 supposui, 5, 36.
 surda vota, 6, 28.
 surdum spirare, 6, 35.
 surgentem callem, 3, 57.
 surgit pellis, 3, 95.
 Surrentina, 3, 93.
 suscipis, 5, 36.
 suspendere lance, 4, 10.
 naso, 1, 118.
 tempora, 5, 47.

229a

trabe fracta, 1, 89.
 rupta, 6, 27.
 vasta, 5, 141.
 trabeate, 3, 29.
 tragoedo maesto, 5, 3.
 traham voce, 5, 28.
 Trajection, 1, 23; 6, 13.
 trama figurae, 6, 73.
 transcendere nummum, 5, 111.
 transilias mare, 5, 146.
 transisse, 5, 60.
 transtro, 5, 147.
 transvectio, 3, 29 (note).
 tremor subit, 3, 100.
 tremulos cachinnos, 3, 87.
 trepida, 1, 74.
 trepidare, 1, 20; 5, 170.
 trepidas mentes, 5, 35.
 trepidat, 3, 88.
 tressis agaso, 5, 76.
 tridental calidum, 3, 100.
 triplex, 6, 78.
 triste bidental, 2, 27.
 trita lacerna, 1, 54.
 tritavus, 6, 57 (note).
 Troiades, 1, 4.
 trossulus, 1, 82.
 trutina, 1, 5.
 trutinari verba, 3, 82.
 tuba, 3, 103.
 tuceta crassa, 2, 42.
 tumebit cutis, 3, 63.
 tumet bile, 2, 14.
 fidelia, 5, 183.
 tunicatum caepe, 4, 30.
 turbida Roma, 1, 5.
 turbinis momento, 5, 78.
 turdarum salivas, 6, 24.
 ture litabis, 5, 120.
 turgescat pagina, 5, 20.
 turgescere somno, 5, 56.
 turgescit bilis, 3, 8.
 turgidus, 3, 98.
 tus, 5, 135.
 Tusco stemmate, 3, 22.
 Tuscum fictile, 2, 60.
 tutor, 3, 96.

230a

U.

uda labella, 2, 32.
 udas fores, 5, 165.
 udo, in udo esse, 1, 105.
 ulcus putre, 3, 113.
 ulterior cinere, 6, 41.
 ultra, 3, 15.
 umbo candidus, 5, 33.
 umbra quinta, 3, 4.
 Umbris pinguibus, 3, 74.
 uncta fenestra, 5, 180.
 patella, 4, 17.
 pulmentaria, 3, 102.
 uncto, sine uncto cenare, 6, 16.
 unctus, 4, 33.
 uncus, 5, 154 (note).

V.

vafer, 1, 116. 132; 6, 20.
 vago inguine, 6, 72.
 vallis = sinus, 6, 8.
 vanescere, 3, 13.
 vapida lagoena, 6, 17.
 pice, 5, 148.
 vapido pectore, 5, 117.
 vaporata aure, 1, 126.
 vappa, 5, 77.
 varicosos centuriones, 5, 189.
 varo (baro), 5, 138.
 varo genio, 6, 18.
 pede, 4, 12.
 vatibus, 5, 1.
 vatum, Prol., 7.
 ve-, 1, 97.
 ve or vel redundant (?), 3, 29.
 vegrandi, 1, 97.
 Veientanum rubellum, 5, 147.
 vel duo, vel nemo, 1, 3.
 Velina, 5, 73.
 velle suum, 5, 53.
 with perf. inf., 1, 41. 91.
 vellere barbam, 1, 133; 2, 28.
 vellus Calabrum, 2, 65.
 velox, 4, 4.
 vena singultiet, 6, 72.
 testiculi, 1, 103.
 venas compositas, 3, 91.
 stringere, 2, 66.
 tangere, 3, 107.
 vendo = vendito, 1, 122.
 veneno ferventi, 3, 37.
 Veneri donatae pupae, 2, 70.
 venire with the dative, 6, 39.
 venosus, 1, 76.
 venter, Prol., 11; 3, 98.
 ventis rumpere, 3, 27.
 ventos premere, 5, 11.
 veratro, 1, 51.
 verba dare, 3, 19; 4, 45.
 togae, 5, 14.
 verecunda mensa, 5, 44.
 veri speciem, 5, 105.
 vernae discincto, 4, 22.
 verrucosa, 1, 77.
 versum cludere, 1, 93.
 tendere, 1, 65.
 verte aliquid, 5, 137.
 verterit, 5, 78.
 vertigo, 5, 76.
 verumne, 3, 7.
 Vestalis urnas, 2, 60.

unde, 1, 73.
 undique, 3, 59.
 ungue caules, 6, 68.
 unguine crasso, 6, 40.
 unguis severos, 1, 65.
 unum opus, 5, 43.
 ὑπόδειν, 3, 20.
 ὑποσκελίξειν, 1, 35.
 ὑπόχαλκος, 5, 106.
 urentis oculos, 2, 34.
 urnas Vestalis, 2, 60.
 urtica, 6, 70.
 usque adeo, 1, 26.
 usum vitae, 5, 94.
 usus rerum, 5, 52.
 ut omitted, 1, 56.
 uxor proxima, 3, 43.

vetare superos, 2, 43.
 vetavit, 5, 90.
 veteres avias, 5, 92.
 vetitos actus, 5, 99.
 veto faxit, 1, 112.
 Vettidius, 4, 25.
 vetule, 1, 22.
 viatica, 5, 65.
 vibice, 4, 49.
 vicinia, 4, 46.
 vidē, 1, 108.
 vigila, 5, 177.
 vin and vis, 1, 56; 6, 63.
 vinci laborat, 5, 39.
 vindicta, 5, 88. 125.
 violae, 1, 40.
 violas, 5, 182.
 Virbi clivus, 5, 56.
 viridi limo, 3, 22.
 vis dicam, 1, 56.
 visceratio, 6, 50 (note).
 vitae rapidae, 5, 94.
 vitiabit agendo, 5, 97.
 vitiarunt pultes, 6, 40.
 vitiato murice, 2, 65.
 vitio praefigere theta, 2, 68.
 stupet, 3, 32.
 utitur, 2, 68.
 vitium sonare, 3, 21.
 vitrea bilis, 3, 8.
 vitulo superbo, 1, 100.
 vivere nostrum, 1, 9.
 vivitur, 4, 43; 5, 53.
 vivo caespite, 6, 31.
 vivunt chordae, 6, 2.
 vixisse, 4, 17.
 Vocative in the predicate, 1, 123; 3, 28.
 voce pura, 5, 28.
 voces centum, 5, 1.
 vomere nebulam, 5, 181.
 voti modicus, 5, 109.
 voto aperto, 2, 7.
 in voto esse, 3, 49.
 vulnera Parthi, 5, 4.
 vulnus caecum, 4, 44.
 vulpem astutam, 5, 117.
 vulvae patriciae, 6, 73.
 vulvas marcentis, 4, 36.

231a

230b

231b

THE END.

 END OF THE PROJECT GUTENBERG EBOOK THE SATIRES OF A. PERSIUS FLACCUS ***

Updated editions will replace the previous one—the old editions will be renamed.

Creating the works from print editions not protected by U.S. copyright law means that no one owns a United States copyright in these works, so the Foundation (and you!) can copy and distribute it in the United States without permission and without paying copyright royalties. Special rules, set forth in the General Terms of Use part of this license, apply to copying and distributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works to protect the PROJECT GUTENBERG™ concept and trademark. Project Gutenberg is a registered trademark, and may not be used if you charge for an eBook, except by following the terms of the trademark license, including paying royalties for use of the Project Gutenberg trademark. If you do not charge anything for copies of this eBook, complying with the trademark license is very easy. You may use this eBook for nearly any purpose such as creation of derivative works, reports, performances and research. Project Gutenberg eBooks may be modified and printed and given away—you may do practically ANYTHING in the United States with eBooks not protected by U.S. copyright law. Redistribution is subject to the trademark license, especially commercial redistribution.

START: FULL LICENSE

THE FULL PROJECT GUTENBERG LICENSE

PLEASE READ THIS BEFORE YOU DISTRIBUTE OR USE THIS WORK

To protect the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting the free distribution of electronic works, by using or distributing this work (or any other work associated in any way with the phrase “Project Gutenberg”), you agree to comply with all the terms of the Full Project Gutenberg™ License available with this file or online at www.gutenberg.org/license.

Section 1. General Terms of Use and Redistributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works

1.A. By reading or using any part of this Project Gutenberg™ electronic work, you indicate that you have read, understand, agree to and accept all the terms of this license and intellectual property (trademark/copyright) agreement. If you do not agree to abide by all the terms of this agreement, you must cease using and return or destroy all copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in your possession. If you paid a fee for obtaining a copy of or access to a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work and you do not agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement, you may obtain a refund from the person or entity to whom you paid the fee as set forth in paragraph 1.E.8.

1.B. “Project Gutenberg” is a registered trademark. It may only be used on or associated in any way with an electronic work by people who agree to be bound by the terms of this agreement. There are a few things that you can do with most Project Gutenberg™ electronic works even without complying with the full terms of this agreement. See paragraph 1.C below. There are a lot of things you can do with Project Gutenberg™ electronic works if you follow the terms of this agreement and help preserve free future access to Project Gutenberg™ electronic works. See paragraph 1.E below.

1.C. The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation (“the Foundation” or PGLAF), owns a compilation copyright in the collection of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works. Nearly all the individual works in the collection are in the public domain in the United States. If an individual work is unprotected by copyright law in the United States and you are located in the United States, we do not claim a right to prevent you from copying, distributing, performing, displaying or creating derivative works based on the work as long as all references to Project Gutenberg are removed. Of course, we hope that you will support the Project Gutenberg™ mission of promoting free access to electronic works by freely sharing Project Gutenberg™ works in compliance with the terms of this agreement for keeping the Project Gutenberg™ name associated with the work. You can easily comply with the terms of this agreement by keeping this work in the same format with its attached full Project Gutenberg™ License when you share it without charge with others.

1.D. The copyright laws of the place where you are located also govern what you can do with this work. Copyright laws in most countries are in a constant state of change. If you are outside the United States, check the laws of your country in addition to the terms of this agreement before downloading, copying, displaying, performing, distributing or creating derivative works based on this work or any other Project Gutenberg™ work. The Foundation makes no representations concerning the copyright status of any work in any country other than the United States.

1.E. Unless you have removed all references to Project Gutenberg:

1.E.1. The following sentence, with active links to, or other immediate access to, the full Project Gutenberg™ License must appear prominently whenever any copy of a Project Gutenberg™ work (any work on which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” appears, or with which the phrase “Project Gutenberg” is associated) is accessed, displayed, performed, viewed, copied or distributed:

This eBook is for the use of anyone anywhere in the United States and most other parts of the world at no cost and with almost no restrictions whatsoever. You may copy it, give it away or re-use it under the terms of the Project Gutenberg License included with this eBook or online at www.gutenberg.org. If you are not located in the United States, you will have to check the laws of the country where you are located before using this eBook.

1.E.2. If an individual Project Gutenberg™ electronic work is derived from texts not protected by U.S. copyright law (does not contain a notice indicating that it is posted with permission of the copyright holder), the work can be copied and distributed to anyone in the United States without paying any fees or charges. If you are redistributing or providing access to a work with the phrase “Project Gutenberg” associated with or appearing on the work, you must comply either with the requirements of paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 or obtain permission for the use of the work and the Project Gutenberg™ trademark as set forth in paragraphs 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.3. If an individual Project Gutenberg™ electronic work is posted with the permission of the copyright holder, your use and distribution must comply with both paragraphs 1.E.1 through 1.E.7 and any additional terms imposed by the copyright holder. Additional terms will be linked to the Project Gutenberg™ License for all works posted with the permission of the copyright holder found at the beginning of this work.

1.E.4. Do not unlink or detach or remove the full Project Gutenberg™ License terms from this work, or any files containing a part of this work or any other work associated with Project Gutenberg™.

1.E.5. Do not copy, display, perform, distribute or redistribute this electronic work, or any part of this electronic work, without prominently displaying the sentence set forth in paragraph 1.E.1 with active links or immediate access to the full terms of the Project Gutenberg™ License.

1.E.6. You may convert to and distribute this work in any binary, compressed, marked up, nonproprietary or proprietary form, including any word processing or hypertext form. However, if you provide access to or distribute copies of a Project Gutenberg™ work in a format other than “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other format used in the official version posted on the official Project Gutenberg™ website (www.gutenberg.org), you must, at no additional cost, fee or expense to the user, provide a copy, a means of exporting a copy, or a means of obtaining a copy upon request, of the work in its original “Plain Vanilla ASCII” or other form. Any alternate format must include the full Project Gutenberg™ License as specified in paragraph 1.E.1.

1.E.7. Do not charge a fee for access to, viewing, displaying, performing, copying or distributing any Project Gutenberg™ works unless you comply with paragraph 1.E.8 or 1.E.9.

1.E.8. You may charge a reasonable fee for copies of or providing access to or distributing Project Gutenberg™ electronic works provided that:

- You pay a royalty fee of 20% of the gross profits you derive from the use of Project Gutenberg™ works calculated using the method you already use to calculate your applicable taxes. The fee is owed to the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, but he has agreed to donate royalties under this paragraph to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation. Royalty payments must be paid within 60 days following each date on which you prepare (or are legally required to prepare) your periodic tax returns. Royalty payments should be clearly marked as such and sent to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation at the address specified in Section 4, “Information about donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation.”
- You provide a full refund of any money paid by a user who notifies you in writing (or by e-mail) within 30 days of receipt that s/he does not agree to the terms of the full Project Gutenberg™ License. You must require such a user to return or destroy all copies of the works possessed in a physical medium and discontinue all use of and all access to other copies of Project Gutenberg™ works.

- You provide, in accordance with paragraph 1.F.3, a full refund of any money paid for a work or a replacement copy, if a defect in the electronic work is discovered and reported to you within 90 days of receipt of the work.
- You comply with all other terms of this agreement for free distribution of Project Gutenberg™ works.

1.E.9. If you wish to charge a fee or distribute a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work or group of works on different terms than are set forth in this agreement, you must obtain permission in writing from the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the manager of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark. Contact the Foundation as set forth in Section 3 below.

1.F.

1.F.1. Project Gutenberg volunteers and employees expend considerable effort to identify, do copyright research on, transcribe and proofread works not protected by U.S. copyright law in creating the Project Gutenberg™ collection. Despite these efforts, Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, and the medium on which they may be stored, may contain “Defects,” such as, but not limited to, incomplete, inaccurate or corrupt data, transcription errors, a copyright or other intellectual property infringement, a defective or damaged disk or other medium, a computer virus, or computer codes that damage or cannot be read by your equipment.

1.F.2. LIMITED WARRANTY, DISCLAIMER OF DAMAGES - Except for the “Right of Replacement or Refund” described in paragraph 1.F.3, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, the owner of the Project Gutenberg™ trademark, and any other party distributing a Project Gutenberg™ electronic work under this agreement, disclaim all liability to you for damages, costs and expenses, including legal fees. YOU AGREE THAT YOU HAVE NO REMEDIES FOR NEGLIGENCE, STRICT LIABILITY, BREACH OF WARRANTY OR BREACH OF CONTRACT EXCEPT THOSE PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH 1.F.3. YOU AGREE THAT THE FOUNDATION, THE TRADEMARK OWNER, AND ANY DISTRIBUTOR UNDER THIS AGREEMENT WILL NOT BE LIABLE TO YOU FOR ACTUAL, DIRECT, INDIRECT, CONSEQUENTIAL, PUNITIVE OR INCIDENTAL DAMAGES EVEN IF YOU GIVE NOTICE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF SUCH DAMAGE.

1.F.3. LIMITED RIGHT OF REPLACEMENT OR REFUND - If you discover a defect in this electronic work within 90 days of receiving it, you can receive a refund of the money (if any) you paid for it by sending a written explanation to the person you received the work from. If you received the work on a physical medium, you must return the medium with your written explanation. The person or entity that provided you with the defective work may elect to provide a replacement copy in lieu of a refund. If you received the work electronically, the person or entity providing it to you may choose to give you a second opportunity to receive the work electronically in lieu of a refund. If the second copy is also defective, you may demand a refund in writing without further opportunities to fix the problem.

1.F.4. Except for the limited right of replacement or refund set forth in paragraph 1.F.3, this work is provided to you ‘AS-IS’, WITH NO OTHER WARRANTIES OF ANY KIND, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED, INCLUDING BUT NOT LIMITED TO WARRANTIES OF MERCHANTABILITY OR FITNESS FOR ANY PURPOSE.

1.F.5. Some states do not allow disclaimers of certain implied warranties or the exclusion or limitation of certain types of damages. If any disclaimer or limitation set forth in this agreement violates the law of the state applicable to this agreement, the agreement shall be interpreted to make the maximum disclaimer or limitation permitted by the applicable state law. The invalidity or unenforceability of any provision of this agreement shall not void the remaining provisions.

1.F.6. INDEMNITY - You agree to indemnify and hold the Foundation, the trademark owner, any agent or employee of the Foundation, anyone providing copies of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works in accordance with this agreement, and any volunteers associated with the production, promotion and distribution of Project Gutenberg™ electronic works, harmless from all liability, costs and expenses, including legal fees, that arise directly or indirectly from any of the following which you do or cause to occur: (a) distribution of this or any Project Gutenberg™ work, (b) alteration, modification, or additions or deletions to any Project Gutenberg™ work, and (c) any Defect you cause.

Section 2. Information about the Mission of Project Gutenberg™

Project Gutenberg™ is synonymous with the free distribution of electronic works in formats readable by the widest variety of computers including obsolete, old, middle-aged and new computers. It exists because of the efforts of hundreds of volunteers and donations from people in all walks of life.

Volunteers and financial support to provide volunteers with the assistance they need are critical to reaching Project Gutenberg™'s goals and ensuring that the Project Gutenberg™ collection will remain freely available for generations to come. In 2001, the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation was created to provide a secure and permanent future for Project Gutenberg™ and future generations. To learn more about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation and how your efforts and donations can help, see Sections 3 and 4 and the Foundation information page at www.gutenberg.org.

Section 3. Information about the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

The Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation is a non-profit 501(c)(3) educational corporation organized under the laws of the state of Mississippi and granted tax exempt status by the Internal Revenue Service. The Foundation's EIN or federal tax identification number is 64-6221541. Contributions to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by U.S. federal laws and your state's laws.

The Foundation's business office is located at 809 North 1500 West, Salt Lake City, UT 84116, (801) 596-1887. Email contact links and up to date contact information can be found at the Foundation's website and official page at www.gutenberg.org/contact

Section 4. Information about Donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation

Project Gutenberg™ depends upon and cannot survive without widespread public support and donations to carry out its mission of increasing the number of public domain and licensed works that can be freely distributed in machine-readable form accessible by the widest array of equipment including outdated equipment. Many small donations ($1 to $5,000) are particularly important to maintaining tax exempt status with the IRS.

The Foundation is committed to complying with the laws regulating charities and charitable donations in all 50 states of the United States. Compliance requirements are not uniform and it takes a considerable effort, much paperwork and many fees to meet and keep up with these requirements. We do not solicit donations in locations where we have not received written confirmation of compliance. To SEND DONATIONS or determine the status of compliance for any particular state visit www.gutenberg.org/donate.

While we cannot and do not solicit contributions from states where we have not met the solicitation requirements, we know of no prohibition against accepting unsolicited donations from donors in such states who approach us with offers to donate.

International donations are gratefully accepted, but we cannot make any statements concerning tax treatment of donations received from outside the United States. U.S. laws alone swamp our small staff.

Please check the Project Gutenberg web pages for current donation methods and addresses. Donations are accepted in a number of other ways including checks, online payments and credit card donations. To donate, please visit: www.gutenberg.org/donate Section 5. General Information About Project Gutenberg™ electronic works

Professor Michael S. Hart was the originator of the Project Gutenberg™ concept of a library of electronic works that could be freely shared with anyone. For forty years, he produced and distributed Project Gutenberg™ eBooks with only a loose network of volunteer support.

Project Gutenberg™ eBooks are often created from several printed editions, all of which are confirmed as not protected by copyright in the U.S. unless a copyright notice is included. Thus, we do not necessarily keep eBooks in compliance with any particular paper edition.

Most people start at our website which has the main PG search facility: www.gutenberg.org.

This website includes information about Project Gutenberg™, including how to make donations to the Project Gutenberg Literary Archive Foundation, how to help produce our new eBooks, and how to subscribe to our email newsletter to hear about new eBooks.